Stabilization Fund Set Up To Stop Cash Leaving U. S.

Placing of Vast Amount of Money in Separate Account Bared.

Officials Silent; Figures Only Clew

Action Just at This Time Brings No Glimmer of Explanation.

By Elliott Thurston.

A simple bookkeeping operation by which the Treasury completed the mechanism for operating its $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund was enshrouded in so much mystery yesterday that a rash of rumor resulted.

All that happened, outwardly, was a change in the daily statement of the Treasury. Whereas the Treasury statement for April 25 recorded the item "Gold in general fund, $2,919,321,341.93," the statement for April 27, issued yesterday, displayed two items. One was "exchange stabilization fund, $1,800,000,000." The other was "gold in general fund, $1,020,232,562.88."

All that Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau or other Treasury officials would say was, "The figures will have to speak for themselves." No hint, intimation, guidance or explanation could be extracted from the Treasury as to why the change was made now, why the so-called stabilization fund authorized by law to be created out of the "profits" from President Roosevelt's cutting of the gold content of the dollar, was set up just at this time.

Guesses Are Numerous.

Rumor was busy with theory. One notion was that inflationist pressures in Congress were moving the Administration toward another slice in the gold content of the dollar. The idea was that Mr. Roosevelt might be paving the way for this action which, in turn, might produce another boost in the price level and so head off the silverites or the other Congressional inflationists who want higher prices.

However, Mr. Roosevelt lately has expressed disappointment with the gold manipulation results. He has appeared to be moving as close

Baltimore, April 30 (AP).—Dr. William H. Welch, dean of scientific American medicine, died late today at the Johns Hopkins Hospital. He was 84.

The eminent pathologist, who held the first professorship of pathology in the Hopkins Medical School and was one of the Hopkins "Big Four," has been ill since February 1, 1933.

He was born in Norfolk, Conn., the descendant of a long line of New England physicians, and had lived in Baltimore for 50 years. He was a bachelor. United States Senator Frederic C. Walcott, of Connecticut, is a nephew.

Cancer of the prostate gland was the cause of his death.

Dr. Welch formerly was professor of preventive medicine at Georgetown University and while there was awarded the 1927 medal for scientific research by the Association of American Physicians.

Bail Cut, but Chipman Remains in Jail Cell

Kansas City, April 30 (AP).—Reducing his bond requirement by 50 per cent did not mean release from jail today for Max Chipman, alleged Boston kidnaper wanted in New York for questioning in a night club slaying.

Judge Thomas J. Seehorn ordered the bond reduced from $50,000 to $25,000 but Chipman, unable to produce the required amount at once, stayed in jail.

Guard at San Quentin, Break Victim, Resigns

San Rafael, Calif., April 30 (AP). The resignation of Charles L. Green, a guard at San Quentin Prison, was handed to Warden James B. Holohan today and at the same time Chief of Police Sabin D. Kane, of San Rafael, announced the temporary suspension of two policemen kidnaped by the two convicts who escaped from the prison.

Green was beaten and tied up by the convicts, Wanda Stewart and Walter Wyeth, who later were shot to death by officers at Victorville after a wild 30-hour ride.

Mrs. Beatrice Beck Tuck, New York social registerite and daughter of Representative James T. Beck, who obtained a divorce yesterday at a private court hearing in Reno, according to the Associated Press. She charged her husband, S. Pinkney Tuck, of New York, with mental cruelty. Dillinger Mob Puts 3 Chicago Police to Rout

Texas Gunsmith Seized for Supplying Outlaw Band With Weapons.

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—Dillinger desperadoes evaded capture today in a running battle, but Federal agents said that one source of machine gun supply had been closed to the gangsters with the arrest of a Texas gun shop operator, who confessed to dealing with Dillinger henchmen.

The encounter took place on the western outskirts of Chicago and ended with three policemen being sent running up a highway in suburban Bellwood, after one had been slugged over the head with a machine gun and the other two disarmed.

The policemen had pursued four men in a speeding car. Catching up, the officers were overpowered. They identified one of the gunmen as George (Baby Face) Nelson, ace killer for John Dillinger. The other three were vaguely identified as John Hamilton, Homer Van Meter and Harry Fox.

Gunsmith Arraigned.

Unshaven and with hair dishevled, H. S. Lebman, San Antonio gunsmith, was arraigned in the Texas city on a charge of receiving, concealing and retaining a Government pistol.

The Department of Justice disclosed that Lebman had made a

Man and Foster Mother Face Trial for Bigamy

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—True bills alleging bigamy were reported today by a Cook County grand jury against Leroy Nelson, 24, and his foster mother, Mrs. Charlotte Nelson, 64, whom he reputedly married four years ago in Jackson, Ky., under a false name to enable the woman to collect a legacy.

Assistant State's Attorney John Philips was reported to have presented evidence intended to show that Nelson later married Mrs. Ruth Proctor Nelson while still married to his foster mother, and had taken the second wife into the home where his foster mother lived.

Nats Beaten By Ruffing's Homer, 7 to 4

Ruffing's Circuit Clout With 2 on in 9th Climaxes Winning Rally.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

The Nats stretched their winning streak to 3 and 8-9 games yesterday and then accumulated a one-game losing streak along about 5:40 p. m. when four Yankee runs came cascading across the plate in the cool of the ninth inning with the necessary ingredients for a 7-4 victory.

Charley Ruffing, who pitched for the Yankees, was the winning pitcher. I'll say he was th winning pitcher. He stepped up to the plate in the ninth inning at a time when the score was tied and two Yankees languishing on base, and he stepped into the first pitched ball offered by Jack Russell, and he whacked a substantially-hit home run into the upper reaches of the left field bleachers.

Pulls His Old Trick.

It was nothing short of a violation of the rules of the pitchers' union, whose unwritten laws put hitting pitchers in the Benedict Arnold class, but this Ruffing has been an incorrigible fellow with

Reynolds Estate Sued In Daughter's Behalf

Dubson, N. C., April 30 (AP).—Legal proceedings were begun here today seeking for 3-year-old Anne Cannon Reynolds a full share of the $25,000,000 estate of her father, the late Smith Reynolds, instead of the $500,000 settled upon her when the tobacco heir and his first wife were divorced.

Judge P. A. McElroy, upon a request by attorneys for one of the guardians of the child, signed an order directing interested parties to answer within 20 days a motion to set aside the agreement.

California Publisher Dies.

Half-Dead Dog Demonstrates His Nose Knows His Food

Berkeley, Calif., April 30 (AP).—"Thirteen" sniffed at a bit of liver today before eating the meat and Dr. Robert E. Cornish, conducting experiments in life restoration, said he believed the revived dog had recovered use of its olfactory nerves.

Previously, the animal, which was asphyxiated and revived on April 13, had gulped its food without smelling it.

The dog, Dr. Cornish said, also had recovered from a head cold.

The scientist also denied a report in the Oakland Tribune that within 24 hours he will be asked by the University of California to give up the laboratory in which he has conducted revivification experiments.

The Tribune said university authorities will request Cornish to move because the building is needed and also because the notoriety surrounding the unusual experiments has proved distasteful.

"I have not received such notice," Dr. Cornish stated.

Dr. Cornish said that despite the fact that "Thirteen" is alive 17 days after its clinical death, it is not the animal to which humanity must look in its research for the secret of revivification.

"Thirteen is still but semiconscious," the research worker said. "Probably his damaged brain cells never will return to normal. We can only hope that with the experience gained from this experiment we will have greater success with our next dog.

"The great problem we face is the supply of oxygen to the brain. Heretofore, the immediate drop in blood pressure and the constriction of the arteries caused by certain injections has prevented the brain from receiving its full quota of blood after revivification starts. Perhaps other injections will enable us to overcome this difficulty."

Dr. Cornish is optimistic in his belief that his life restoration process eventually will aid human victims of asphyxiation or drowning, although he has refused offers from persons to be the subject of his experiments.

Roosevelt May Ask Cut In Rum Tax

Choate "Expose" of Big Bootleg Growth Is Spur to Action.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Revived by Joseph M. Choate's "expose" of bootlegging, sentiment within the Administration yesterday appeared to be crystallizing in favor of reduced liquor taxes and a lowering of the present high tariff.

Other repercussions from the alcohol control director's statement, declaring that "prohibition's Frankenstein monster" continues to exist in all its former glory, included:

Plans of the Treasury to mobilize an army of between 1,600 and 2,000 revenue agents in a new drive for enforcement, beginning in May.

Protest to President Roosevelt by 12 members of the House, all but one Democratic, against "strait-jacket" regulation of the legal industry by the Federal Alcohol Control Administration.

Evidence by Dr. James M. Doran, supervisor of the Distillers' Code Authority, in support of Choate's analysis of liquor conditions, concerning which he termed this country "a fool's paradise."

May Rush New Legislation.

Although this session of Congress, whipped along by an impatinet Administration, is now far gone it was believed in some quarters that the President might follow Mr. Choate's recommendations to the extent of proposing new legislation to lower liquor taxes.

It was thought much more certain that Mr. Roosevelt, given the broad powers of executive action now contained in the pending tariff bill, would put into effect reductions from the present level both to improve the quality of domestic liquor by blending and to increase the store of legal beverages.

At all events, it was obvious that the Choate statement had served to bring the bootleg menace back into public consciousness, with strong indications the White House may see fit to step into the situation in a further effort to liquidate the liquor racketeer.

Enforcement which admittedly has been inadequate following the disorganization that accompanied repeal will take on new life May 10, the Treasury promised. On that date agents of the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol and old prohibition agents will be merged into a new division of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Altogether the new enforcement unit is expected to consist of about 1,850 agents, most of whom will form a field force considerably larger than the prohibition officers, who numbered 1,200 before repeal. Summoned to direct the work is Arthur J. Mellott, Morgenthau-appointed lawyer of Kansas City.

Celler Hits FACA.

As an aftermath to the Choate statement on bootlegging, aggressive Representative Emanuel Celler (Democrat), directed from his

Modern Carrie Nation Smashes Bar and Flees

Baltimore, April 30 (AP).—Police were searching today for an unidentified woman who pulled a Carrie Nation stunt of chopping her way into a bar room with an ax.

William Poplar, bartender, who sleeps in the rear of the place, was awakened early today by the sound of crashing and banging. Running out he found a woman, armed with an ax, surveying the shattered front door she had just smashed. She hurried away.

Extra Wheeze! Rib Broken by Sneeze

Hagerstown, Md., April 30 (Spl.).—Sneezing is a new hazard for Earl Strickley, Roadside Inn proprietor.

Strickley has sneezed hundreds of times without any ill effects. But today after a sneeze, a sharp pain developed in his side. A doctor informed him that the sneeze had fractured a rib on the left side.

Garnett Receives Threat in Letter

Cannon's Acquittal Is "Fan Mail" Start.

The "fan mail" of United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett has already begun to flow into his office following the acquittal of Bishop James Cannon, jr., and Miss Ada L. Burroughs.

Mr. Garnett yesterday received a crudely typewritten letter, embellished by a crimson border, with three "K's" as the signature. The writer conveyed to Garnett the idea that it would not go well with him if he ever prosecuted another preacher.

"We will take you out and brand you all over with crosses. We are meeting tonight to celebrate Cannon's victory; we are 25,000 strong from New York, New Jersey, West Virginia and Maryland and Virginia. We aren't willing to turn our country over to Rome, if you are."

The United States attorney indicated he paid little serious attention to the missive.

Riots Sweep France Eve Of May Day

One Killed, Many Hurt, 40,000 on Guard in Paris.

Doumergue Determined to Crush Outbreaks; Strike Called.

Paris, April 30 (AP).—A policeman was killed and many officers and civilians were wounded tonight in political rioting in France on the eve of "Red May Day."

Grave fears were held of possible outbreaks in Paris, where 10,000 troops and 30,000 police guarded the capital as the government prepared to deal sternly with a Communist general strike tomorow.

Fierce fighting broke out at Angers when a Leftist mob gathered outside a hall to protest a meeting of a Republican group sympathetic to the Doumergue government.

Numbers were injured in hand-to-hand fighting and a policeman died of his injuries soon afterward in a hospital.

Widespread Plot Reported.

A report that a revolutionary plot aimed at six European capitals was uncovered in raids Sunday in Brussels and Malines put police here on the alert.

Leftists numbering 400, incensed over a close election Sunday, rioted tonight at Mantes, not far from Paris, and wounded a priest before being dispersed by gendarmes. Similar disorders occurred there last night because of the defeat of the "anti-Fascist" candidate in a bye-election.

Three youths, who said they were venting their hate for "the middle class" by stoning automobiles, were arrested in Compiegne.

Paris, not yet recovered from the sanguinary February street riots and seething with political discontent, resembled a war camp ready to make good Premier Doumergue's determination to "crush any revolutionary movement at the outset" which might, he said, "lead to armed invasion."

Bayonets Bristle in Streets.

Heavy detachments of soldiers patrolled the "Red Ring" of factory suburbs, notorious hotbeds of conspiracy, and bristling stacks of bayoneted rifles filled the broad Champs de Mars.

Two public reviews of troops were staged today to drive home the government's resolve that the "Red Labor Day" must be quiet.

Violent political enmities, such as that which flared in Nantes last night, when 2,000 stone-flinging anti-Fascists battled police for five hours, presented a greater threat than the strikers.

Water, gas, electric, telephone, telegraph and transportation services are expected to continue normal tomorrow, since the strike will be effective mainly in the government tobacco and cartridge factories.

Streets will be without taxis, for the drivers, as customary on May Day, will be on strike.

Large factories will be protected by soldiers, especially those in suburban Communist strongholds, at Saint Denis, Courbevois and Gentilly.

Seven thousand soldiers poured

Katharine Hepburn Is Reported After Divorce in Mexico

Merida, Yucatan, Mexico, April 30 (AP).—A woman registered at the Hotel Itza here under the name of Mrs. Ludlow Smith, but who is reported here to be the actress, Katherine Hepburn, has filed a petition for a divorce. The decree is expected to be granted within a few days. The woman has reserved a seat in an airplane for Miami.

New York, April 30 (AP).—Ludlow Smith, whose wife is better known to the public at Katherine Hepburn, today left his office in the hands of a secretary who reported "there is no comment" on the reported divorce proceedings begun by Mrs. Smith in Mexico.

Smith, an insurance man and former Philadelphian, always has disliked the publicity surrounding his actress-wife when it reflected on him.

Hunt for Assailant Sped As Gun Victims Improve

While detectives continued their search last night for a demented colored gunman, Newell T. Styles, 35, a bank teller, and James Johnson, 38, colored, victims of his unprovoked street attack Saturday, were recovering from serious wounds.

Several suspects have been arrested, but police state they have been unable to shed any light as to the gunman's identity.

New Monster Is Seen! Heebie-Jeebies, Maybe?

Calcutta, India, April 30 (U.P.). A new sea monster was reported washed up on the banks of the River Hugli, near here, today.

The monster was described as about 20 feet long, with elephant-like ears, a mouth big enough to swallow two men, a whale-like tail and tusks on both sides of the head. Its weight was estimated at two tons.

Envoy Conveys America's Stand

Secretary Goes Further Than Simon Voicing Disapproval.

By Kendall Foss.

Japanese claims to a paramount interest in Far Eastern affairs have received a rude setback at the hands of mild-mannered Secretary of State Cordell Hull, it was revealed last night.

Calmly and with dignity, yet with an unmistakable firmness of tone, the United States advised Japan she does not recognize one-sided modification of treaties to which both are parties.

Secretary Hull's views were communicated to Tokyo by Ambassador Joseph Grew, acting upon instructions from home. Grew called upon Foreign Minister Koki Hirota late Sunday and made a verbal statement. He left a copy of his remarks. The substance of what he told Hirota was made public here last night.

Backs China's Rights.

Differing considerably from the British attitude, the United States takes a definitely more forward position. Where Sir John Simon, Britain's foreign secretary, told the House of Commons he was satisfied with Japan's assurances she meant no harm by her recent "hands off" declaration and that he recognized her "special rights," Secretary Hull said this country expects observance of the various treaties which guarantee the independence of China and the maintenance of the "open door." He said nothing about "special rights."

"In the opinion of the American people and the American Government," Grew told Hirota, "no na-

NRA Hurts Business, 100 Cities Report

Complaints to Chamber Before Convention Today.

A majority of business concerns in more than 100 American cities reported yesterday that NRA had been detrimental in some respects to industry and trade.

The report was in the form of a summary of answers to a questionnaire sent out by the United States Chamber of Commerce and it will be presented at the convention of the Chamber of Commerce opening today.

"There was a large group of complaints about unequal consideration for employers and employes, with so much favor to the latter as to cause disturbances, the effect of which upon recovery locally was feared," the chamber's announcement said.

"There was almost an equally large number of complaints based on an increase in costs without ability to get a corresponding increase in prices, with varying degrees of apprehension by reason of this condition. There were several expressions to the effect that there was local detriment because of the uncertainty with respect to future National action relating to labor, as well as other matters under codes."

Unemployment Reduced.

At the same time, the report showed a reduction of unemployment to a marked degree in industrial centers. The percentage of reduction was as high as 40 to 50 per cent in a number of cities. The usual reduction reported, however, was 10 to 15 per cent and about 20 per cent of the cities reported little or no reemployment.

Wall Street Flayed as Foe Of Stock Bill

By Robert C. Albright.

Amidst charges of propagandized opposition, "misrepresentation" and organized interference from Wall street, the Fletcher-Rayburn stock market control bill yesterday was belligerently launched on its seven-hour course through the House.

Chairman Sam Rayburn, of the Interstate Commerce Committee, flanked by a table full of letters, telegrams and alleged lobbying "evidence," opened the drive for passage with an attack on "the New York Stock Exchange, its satellites and hirelings."

Impatiently gesticulating, quoting freely from wires and letters he said had been widely circulated against the bill, the short, heavy-set, bluntly expressive co-author of the stock regulatory measure held the floor for nearly an hour.

Pecora Drops In.

From the gallery above, Thomas Corcoran and Benjamin Cohen, young Government lawyers who had a hand in the bill, closely followed every word of debate. Ferdinand Pecora, Senate Banking Committee counsel, stopped by for a few moments.

Richard Whitney, New York Stock Exchange president, who appeared before both Congressional committees in opposition to the bill, was not present, although Rayburn made pointed reference to "representatives of the New York Stock Exchange who do me the honor to sit in the galleries."

House opposition to the measure as now drafted was not slow to take shape after Rayburn's speech. Representative Alfred L. Bulwinkle, North Carolina Democrat, let it be

Parents of 'Test Tube' Twins Reveal Eugenic Baby Practice

New York, April 30 (AP).—Birth of "test tube" twins disclosed today a "laboratory baby" technique that has been successful in 12 cases.

Mr. and Mrs. Salvatore Lauricella, who has been childless eight years, were so pleased when their two babies were born that they revealed the secret.

Dr. Frances Seymour and Dr. Alfred Koener, both graduates of the Medical College of Virginia and now practicing in New York, then said they had conducted a series of successful experiments for the past two years, but expressed surprise at public interest in the results.

Dr. Iago Gladston, secretary of the medical information bureau of New York Academy of Medicine, said he, too, was surprised that a "test tube baby" should evoke excitement.

"The idea historically is at least 2,000 years old," Dr. Gladston said. "In practice it has been used for at least 150 years."

Dr. Seymour, a woman obstetrician, said "usually parents do not want publicity about this kind of thing. I suppose they were so happy about getting twins that they just couldn't contain themselves."

A process of artificial insemination has resulted in eight births and five other deliveries are expected at an early date, Dr. Seymour and her associate disclosed.

Dr. Seymour asserted none of the women could have borne children except through the intervention of

Austria Bows To Fascist Rule

Parliament Passes New Constitution Ending Its Existence.

Vienna, April 30 (U.P.).—Parliamentary rule in post war Republican Austria came to an end today with the promulgation of a new constitution transforming the Nation into a Fascist state.

Little semblance of democracy remained under the new deal inaugurated by Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss and his powerful Fascist-inclined associates.

The national parliament, in a one-hour session, made history when it approved in one vote the degrees submitted by the Dollfuss ministry and the new constitution.

The constitution provides for a so-called "staendische" state, or a nation whose national council, replacing parliament, will be appointed by the president. Representative parliaments elected by the people are a thing of the past. The reorganization of Austria along these lines is similar to the alteration of Italy's parliament by Premier Benito Mussolini, sponsor of Fascism and the Guild-run state.

The new regime was received variously by the Austrians. It was opposed by probably three-fourths of the population, including:

1—The outlawed Nazis, who have not been permitted to show their strength in elections since their party became a popular movement.

2—The Socialists, who have been banned and whose leaders are in jail.

3—The semi-Nazi so-called Pan-German party and the Landbund party, sympathetic toward the Nazis. Both these latter represented in parliament.

Chester Conklin Plans To Wed 22-Year Invalid

Los Angeles, April 30 (AP).—Chester Conklin, movie comedian, came to the marriage license bureau today and said, "I'm going to get married, but my future wife is an invalid and couldn't come up here."

He obtained an application blank and left without disclosing the name of the bride-to-be, but it was learned Conklin will marry Miss Marguerite Rouse, who has been in invalid 22 years.

Greased Pole Cut Down To Remove Red Flag

Milwaukee, April 30 (AP).—The red flag of Communism flapped in the wind for several hours today over the old county courthouse and the only way it could be taken down was by cutting the pole.

The ingenious flag raiser, intent on having the banner in the breeze tomorrow for a May Day observance, had greased the pole and slashed the ropes. The pole, erected in 1870, was ordered removed.

Japan's Asiatic Policy Receives O.K. of Britain

London, April 30 (U.P.).—Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, assured Parliament today that Japan had no intention of scrapping the "open door" in the Far East and that Tokyo was adhering to the nine-power treaty guaranteeing China's sovereignty.

In a formal statement in the House of Commons, Sir John outlined conversations between the British Ambassador in Japan, Sir Francis Lindley, and Koki Hirota, Japanese foreign minister, which he said had clarified satisfactorily Japan's attitude toward China and the interests of other powers in Asia.

His statement made it clear that Great Britain feels Japan virtually has retracted the foreign office spokesman's verbal statement on April 17 of a "hands-off-China" policy.

Wholly unconfirmed rumors were current in London that the Japanese war office officials were incensed at Hirota's alleged weakening in the face of pressure from the powers and threatened to take the delicate situation into their own hands.

Two Concessions Made.

Sir John, however, insisted that as far as Britain was concerned, Hirota's conversations with Sir Francis in Tokyo had explained everything satisfactorily, and the Japanese were preparing to continue as in the past under the terms of the nine-power treaty.

The foreign secretary, nevertheless, made two notable concessions to Hirota, observers agreed, namely:

1. He acknowledged "Japan's special rights in China which are recognized by the other powers as unshared by them."

2. His statement surprisingly omitted disclosure of the text of Hirota's April 25 memorandum to United States Ambassador Joseph C. Grew, and the nearly identical version handed Ambassador Lindley.

Diplomatic observers believe the British and Japanese governments have reached an understanding to keep the contents of these documents secret. The reason is not known, but one version said the decision was due to a desire to prevent embarrassment for Hirota owing to the Japanese war office's alleged displeasure at the virtual withdrawal of the April 17 statement by Eiji Amau, foreign office spokesman.

Experts Mystified.

Sir John's reference to "Japan's special rights" mystified Far Eastern experts, who remained convinced that the nine-power treaty, signed in Washington in 1922, banned such exclusive rights.

The foreign secretary, reporting on the Lindley-Hirota conversations, said the British envoy reminded Hirota of the provisions of the treaty and added that Britain must continue to enjoy all rights provided in the nine-power pact. He revealed that Hirota replied that Japan would continue to observe the treaty and that the policy of the Japanese and British governments in relation thereto coincided.

He said in conclusion Hirota had promised to maintain the "open-door" policy in Asia, providing for equal economic opportunity for all nations.

Nanking, April 30 (U.P.).—The Chinese government considers reported modification of Japan's April 17 policy toward China leaves the situation fundamentally unchanged, it was learned today.

Officials here were frankly disappointed at dispatches intimating that London considers the incident closed. They eagerly awaited clarification of Washington's views.

"Test-Tube" Baby Practice Revealed science and disclosed also that two unmarried women, given babies with the assistance of anonymous fathers, were included in the series of experiments.

"The two mothers are both prominent business women," Dr. Seymour said. "They wanted babies, but were unmarried. They felt they had a right to children. One now has a baby nine months old. The other will give birth soon."

Dr. Seymour placed particular emphasis on differences between two types of laboratory impregnations. In the first, as in the case of the Lauricellas, the baby is truly of their own flesh and blood. In the other, an anonymous man, known only to the physician, becomes the father of the eugenic baby.

"Aiding a mother who is sterile because of some physical obstruction or acid condition is rather ordinary in modern practice," Dr. Seymour said. "Aiding a woman to have a eugenic baby by a father whom she has never seen is a new thing, but is growing constantly."

Dr. Seymour added that fathers for the eugenic babies were chosen on the basis of excellent health and after special blood tests had been made. These anonymous fathers are paid from $100 to $150.

Neither of the two mothers of eugenic babies in her experience, Dr. Seymour continued, expressed any desire to know more about the fathers except that they were in excellent health and of above average height.

Roosevelt May Ask Early Slash in Taxes on Liquor

New York home the release of the protest against FACA. It attempted to turn the tables on the Liquor Control Administration, declaring it responsible in part, at least, for the bootlegging that astounded its director.

"Regulations that are most burdensome have made it difficult for the legitimate trader to function and quite easy for the bootlegger and illegitimate trader to prosper," declares the protest, which goes on to state that the present system of quotas and permits is of "doubtful" legality.

The statement further charges the FACA with virtual dictatorship, with giving preference in the allocation of Scotch quotas to the "British whisky trust," and, incidentally, with treating members of Congress "discourteously" by ignoring them, their 'phone calls, or their letters.

It was signed by Emanuel Celler, Samuel Dickstein, James J. Lanzetta, George W. Lindsay and John J. Boylan, New York; Patrick J. Boland and Francis E. Walter, Pennsylvania; Francis B. Condon, Rhode Island; Lawrence Lewis, Colorado; A. J. Sabath, Illinois; Martin L. Sweeney, Ohio, and Fred A. Hartley, jr., New Jersey, the lone Republican.

"Must Lower Tariff."

Solution to the bootleg problem, according to Dr. Doran, lies in "a quick rebuilding of the revenue force for taxation control, together with a lowering of the tariff barrier behind which the bootlegger now operates with a wide margin of profit." Federal and State taxes, he says, account for more than half the cost of legal liquor.

Dr. Doran's advocacy of a reduced tariff, now $5 per gallon, presented the unusual case of an industry asking for removal of protection. The explanation lay in the distillers' desire for cheaper liquor for blending to improve quality.

"We were all very much surprised to see the way bootlegging continued on such a large scale. Of course," Doran said, with a wave of his hand, "Choate's statement indicated it was just as much, if not more, than before prohibition. We know that, from the second-hand bottle racket, for one thing."

Declaring that "we get the credit for all this rotten stuff," Dr. Doran mentioned the recent seizure in St. Louis of three tons of labels, stamps and other paraphenalia by which illegal liquor gets on legal shelves. Concerning taxes, he figured that a case of liquor that leaves the distillery at from $8.40 to $14 is taxed $8.52 by the time it is placed on sale in the District of Columbia, not counting licenses.

Consumption Is Lower.

Dr. Doran's statement estimated the total legal consumption this year at not more than 35,000,000 gallons, one-fifth of the demand before prohibition and a third of the Treasury estimate for the year. In further support of Mr. Choate's contention that more bootleg liquor is consumed than the honest product, he pointed out that population has increased since prohibition and the number of States in which liquor may be sold has risen from 17 to 27.

Nevertheless, "prices are steadily declining," declared the code supervisor, former commissioner for industrial alcohol. "I should judge they are 20 to 30 per cent lower than in February. Competition is very keen."

From the Repeal Associates, meantime, came a statement by Capt. W. H. Stayton, managing director, urging further efforts to solve the liquor problem. Concerning the Choate survey, it said, "No statement so compact with knowledge, courage and constructive suggestions has ever been issued by a Government official whose duties led him to touch on the liquor traffic."

Hull Disputes Tokyo Claims In Orient Row

tion can, without the assent of the other nations concerned, rightfully endeavor to make conclusive its will in situations where there are involved the rights, the obligations and the legitimate interests of other sovereign states."

The United States, Grew added, is dedicated to the policy of the good neighbor, and will continue to devote its best efforts to the practical application of that policy—on its own part and in association with others.

Treaties, he observed, can only be lawfully modified or terminated by process prescribed or recognized or agreed upon by the parties concerned.

Demands Consideration.

In its international associations relationships the United States seeks to be duly considerate of the rights, obligations and legitimate interests of other countries and it expects others to show the same consideration in return, Grew added.

Bringing the Kellogg pact for the outlawry of war to the front for the first time since President Roosevelt took office, the declaration went on to remind Japan both countries are signatories to it as well as to the nine-power treaty of 1922. The latter treaty defines the rights and obligations of the countries interested in Chinese affairs. It provides for the "open door" and for refraining from taking advantage of China's weakened condition.

This restatement of American adherence to all the treaties concerning the Far East was necessitated, the statement explained, by "recent indications of attitude on the part of the Japanese government with regard to the rights and interests of Japan and other countries in China and in connection with China."

Frank Diplomacy.

These indications came from sources so authoritative, it was pointed out, as to make it impossible to ignore them. Thus the unofficial character of the April 17 pronouncement from Tokyo (later made official in a much milder form) was drawn into the picture as the real basis for the action.

In the light of these claims, the United States feels, the traditions of frank diplomacy make restatement of the American position imperative.

Eyes swung toward the Far East as soon as Hull's words had been digested. Officially Japan can scarcely take offense; unofficially she may well express her dissatisfaction with the American insistence on maintaining the status quo in the Orient.

A blast from the redoutable Eiji Amau, foreign office spokesman, is looked for. If one comes, it will be for home consuption and designed to mollify the military group, smarting probably under Hull's clearly implied rebuke.

Sir John Simon concluded his statement to the House of Commons yesterday with the observation the incident was closed. It was intimated here no special answer was expected from Tokyo, which also points to a closed incident.

Further Move Expected.

Observers, however, do not believe this is the last that will be heard of Japan's desire to supervise Chinese affairs. For the declaration of April 17 and the world reaction which culminated yesterday are but a step in a policy launched as early as 1895 and pursued with tenacity ever since. Japan, many observers believe, intends to extend her influence on to the Asiatic mainland, means to become a continental, not an insular power.

One thing may yield considerable comfort to Tokyo in the activities which followed her declaration: there is, apparently, as little effective Anglo-American collaboration to be feared now as there was in 1932 at the time of the Manchurian adventure. Some close followers of Far Eastern events have suggested one purpose of the Japanese step was to get a line on the degree of British-American united front she had to fear at the 1935 naval conference.

In one of those pleasing little ironies of diplomatic life, President Roosvelt cabled the Emperor of Japan yesterday, saying: "On this anniversary of your Imperial Majesty's birth I send you cordial felicitations."

Tanks, Big Guns on Hand.

Fifteen tanks, four of the famous "seventy-five" guns, tractors, 20 machine guns and a small fleet of armored cars rolled past in the reviews before the Invalides and near the limits of Vincennes, where Communists will have an open-air meeting tomorrow.

Communists called the country-wide general strike in protest against the premier's economy decree laws, which marchers under the red flag denounce as "fascist dictatorship."

Apprehension was heightened in some quarters by discontent among 800,000 functionaries against the cutting of their pay and the dismissal of 80,000 of their number under the Doumergue decrees.

Filipinos Set To Accept Rule

Legislature in Session for Passage of Bill Giving Freedom.

Manila, April 30 (AP).—The Philippine Legislature has convened in special session to accept tomorrow the United States Congress' offer that will bring into birth an independent Philippine government by 1945.

The 30-minute proceedings of the Legislature, in which it plans to approve the resolution accepting self-government, were scheduled to begin at 11 a. m. Tuesday (10 p. m. Monday, E. S. A.), and a program of jubilation was to be radiocast to the United States.

Expressing "appreciation and everlasting gratitude to the President and Congress of the United States and to the American people," the resolution of acceptance will quote President Roosevelt's message of March 2, in which he said:

"Where inequalities exist, I am confident they can be corrected after a proper hearing and in fairness to both peoples."

A triumphal reception was given to Manuel Quezon, President of the Senate, who arrived from Washington a few hours before the Legislature met today. He was hailed as a conquering hero by his countrymen for his part in procuring the passage of the Tydings-McDuffie bill, which provides for Philippine freedom ten years after the proposed establishment of a transitional commonwealth government, probably next year.

Peace Officer's Attacker Taken To Baltimore

Crisfield, Md., April 30 (U.P.).—Harry Flemming, colored, hunted through the night as the assailant of a peace officer, was arrested at dawn today and rushed to Baltimore in fear of mob feeling which ran high here during early hours of the hunt.

Mobs gathered in the streets and a throng of nearly 1,000 men and boys formed a posse to hunt the colored man when first word of the attack was spread. Today Mayor William H. Bradshaw said the crowd had dispersed. He reported the situation as quieting.

The officer, Harry Dougherty, was in critical condition at the hospital. He was struck over the head with a chisel. Dougherty had gone to the colored man's home after neighbors reported Fleming was intoxicated and was beating his wife.

The colored man was found after a 12-hour hunt hiding at the home of a friend at a farm house near Westover. Officers immediately started with him for Baltimore, acting on advice of the mayor, who said he feared trouble if he was returned here.

Bakers and Cooks Graduate at Meade

Baltimore, April 30 (Spl.).—Today was commencemetn day at the bakers and cooks school at Fort George G. Meade and diplomas were handed out to 117 graduates.

Those who received their culinary sheepskins, so to speak, included 25 reserve officers, 92 Civilians Conservation Corps stewards and 5 Regular Army enlisted men. Each will return to a post in the Third Corps area.

The enlisted men will be assigned to Fort Howard, Fort Meade, Camp Holabird and Edgewood Arsenal. The CCC graduates will be sent to camps of that unit in this district, and the reserve officers will be subdistrict mess supervisors.

Sanders Visits D.C. to Open Office

Anti-Long Candidate Says "I'm Well-Elected."

Representative-elect J. Y. Sanders, jr., of the Sixth Louisiana District, which has been without a Representative since the death in June, 1933, of Bolivar E. Kemp, was in the Capital yesterday to prepare to take over the business of his district, the Associated Press reported.

The general election in Louisiana today will formally make him Representative from the district, since he will have no Republican opposition.

His only comment on his election, in which he ran as an anti-Long candidate, was that he considered himself "well elected."

Italian Cabinet Change Hints General Shake-up

Rome, April 30 (AP).—A general shake-up in the Italian cabinet was foreshadowed today as Count Costanzo Ciano, father-in-law of Premier Mussolini's daughter, Edda, was elected president of the Chamber of Deputies and resigned as Minister of Communications.

known he will offer an amendment for creation of an independent agency to administer the bill. Representative Fred A. Britten, Illinois Republican, said he would support it, but asked the New York Stock Exchange be given representation.

Warned by Wadsworth.

Representative James W. Wadsworth, of New York, former Senator and sometimes mentioned as a Republican presidential possibility, warned the House "not to belittle the concern that is felt throughout the country about this bill."

He said the bill "would center in the Federal Trade Commssion very practical control over all corporations," adding that the measure as orignally drawn "was calculated to throw fear into the minds of brokers, dealers, bankers, security owners and those responsible for management of great business enterprises."

Others, including Representative Schuyler Merritt (Republican), Connecticut, who filed the committee's minority report against the bill, and Representative Loring Black, jr. (Democrat), New York, took the floor against the bill.

Meantime, the Central Committee of Employes of the Financial Districts of the United States, claiming to represent more than 1,000,000 employes and their families through committees in 45 States, appealed for revision, to provide for a special commission of experts, including one industrialist, one banker, and one broker, to administer the bill.

Robert M. Suydam, chairman of the committee, this morning will present Speaker Rainey a petition signed by affected financial district employes.

Vote to be Delayed.

Under the seven-hour debate rule adopted yesterday by the House, no vote probably will be reached on the bill until late tomorrow.

A number of amendments are expected to be offered before the final showdown, some of them representing proposals made by the New York Stock Exchange when the bill was before the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Representative Rayburn made brief reference to the amendments in his speech yesterday. He declared he intends "to brand everyone of them as they come up."

"Some people in this country may want the New York Stock Exchange and its satellites and hirelings to write this legislation," he continued. "I do not."

He said he has received countless letters from men professing to know how the bill should be written, but when he invited them to testify, they "replied with letters containing veiled insults."

"The campaign of misrepresentation of the objectives of this legislation, and the lengths to which men have gone to try to prejudice the minds of members of Congress who did not serve upon the committees, and who were not at the hearings, is beyond anything it has been my privilege to know," he said.

Rayburn read extracts from a number of letters and telegrams he said had been circulated against the bill, many of which he declared were "identical, coming from a common source and dictated by a common source." He exhibited 200 letters on the same type of stationery. A number of amendments proposed by business men individually, he said, were readily traceable to the publicity department of the New York Stock Exchange.

Feared to Favor Bill.

Rayburn declared one large operator on the New York exchange, who operates several branch houses and has 800 employes, told him he personally favored a strong bill "but if I put myself up in opposition to them as favoring a good, strong bill, they will destroy me by 10 o'clock in the morning."

He said if any member could demonstrate to his committee "that there is regimentation of business in this bill, we are willing to take it out."

"It matters not how you revise this bill, nor what you take out of it, the people who operate the exchanges do not want it," he said.

Representative Merritt told the House the committee did not remove the fundamental objection to the original bill—"indeterminate power over all issues of stock, and thus over all corporations."

He said the flood of correspondence against the measure should not be attributed to "propaganda."

"It is simply a legitimate desire on the part of owners to protect their property from undue and unnecessary depreciation," he said.

Representative Black declared the bill attempted to remedy some abuses that already have been dealt with and corrected by New York State laws and United States postal regulations. He pointed out that "wash sales" and "matched orders" already are illegal in his State.

High Court Denies Prison Transfer

Convict Refused Right to Return to Lorton.

The United States Supreme Court yesterday denied a review in the case of Parker H. Lee, colored, who had been sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment for killing his wife in 1927, and asked that the sentence be served in the District Reformatory at Lorton, Va.

Lee has been in the Federal penitentiary at Atlanta since his conviction. A recent ruling by Federal Judge Underwood, of Georgia, provided in effect that prisoners sentenced from the District who had served one-fifth of their sentences and were therefore eligible for parole, should be returned to the District to make applications.

Sanford Bates, superintendent of United States penal institutions, ordered the ruling appealed because that 300 convicts might be returned to the already overcrowded prison at Lorton.

Boy, 5, Seriously Hurt When Struck by Auto

Five-year-old Harold R. Miller was injured seriously yesterday when struck near his home in the 2700 block of Q street northwest by an automobile driven by Elmer Lee Klavaus, of the 1400 block of Belmont road northwest, according to police.

At Georgetown Hospital, he was found to be suffering from concussion, fractured ankle and possible internal injuries and fractured skull. Police said the accident occurred when the youngster dodged from behind a taxicab into the path of Klavaus' machine.

Mrs. Roosevelt Holds Slum Clearance Likely

Prospects for the pending District alley closing bill are promising, it was indicated at Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference yesterday. Mrs. Roosevelt has kept in close touch with the progress of this bill and also with legislation relating to low cost housing in the District.

As a member of the low cost housing committee of the District, Mrs. Roosevelt discussed the control of rents and expressed hope that this may be brought about.

Mothers' Day To Mark Start Of Jamestown

Peery Plans to Proclaim Joint Fete; Roosevelt Will Attend.

Richmond, April 30 (AP). — A joint Mothers' Day-Jamestown Day proclamation by Gov. Peery probably will set aside Sunday, May 13, for general observance throughout Virginia, with especial Founders' Day religious services to be attended by President Roosevelt and the Virginia Governor at James town.

Simultaneously with an announcement in Washington today that the President would attend the services commemorating the 327th anniversary of the landing of the Cavaliers, who founded the first permanent English settlement in the New World at Jamestown, Gov. Peery said he thought it would be fitting to issue a joint proclamation for that day. He pointed out that the Jamestown settlers established the mother colony in the New World.

Services at Jamestown for May 13 have been arranged by the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities.

Miss Ellen Bagby, chairman of the association's Jamestown committee, said the program will include two religious services—one in the afternoon, to be followed by a musical program, rendered by choirs and college glee clubs participating in a music festival at the College of William and Mary, at Williamsburg.

The religious services will be held by Bishop A. C. Thomson, of the Diocese of Southern Virginia. They will be conducted in the old Jamestown Church, which has been preserved by the association.

The announcement that President Roosevelt had accepted an invitation to attend the Jamestown services was made by former Gov. John Garland Pollard, who, with Gov. Peery and Senator Harry F. Byrd, extended the Virginia invitation.

The President, Dr. Pollard said, plans to come to Jamestown by boat and return to Washington by automobile.

McLaughlin Declares He Got Ransom

U. S. Links Dillinger Gang, Bremer Kidnapers, Swindle Ring.

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—Four men had been snared tonight in Government traps set along the back trail of Edward Bremer's $200,000 kidnap ransom and from its prisoners the Department of Justice learned of an interlocking band of criminals embracing the Dillinger gang, Bremer's kidnapers, a notorious swindler and a mail robbers' fence.

John J. McLaughlin, former State Legislator, confessed today he was given $53,000 of the St. Paul banker's ransom to circulate, Melvin H. Purvis, of the Bureau of Investigation, announced.

From whom he got the money was a secret of the Government or McLaughlin. Held with the old-time politician on charges of conspiracy to possess the ransom were his 17-year-old son, Jack; Philip Delaney, 34, nabbed at McLaughlin's home, and William E. Vidler, whose arrest Thursday launched the round-up of the gang.

Former Convicts Hunted.

Hunted as the actual kidnapers were two former convicts from Oklahoma, Arthur Barker and Alvin Karpis—criminals who were part of the Dillinger school of seven big ones that got away from the Federal net at Little Bohemia, resort in Wisconsin, a week ago.

Coincidental with the issuance of warrants against Delaney and young McLaughlin today, the collector of internal revenue filed an income tax lien for $60,908 against William Elmer Mead, convict and swindler, whose tracks were sighted along one of the side trails of the Bremer case.

The revenue department and Purvis refused to furnish any details of the Mead case, but he was understood to have been the man who "discovered" Bremer as a potential victim.

Already Under Charge.

Mead, like McLaughlin, was already under bond on another Federal charge. McLaughlin is accused of being the high fence in handling the $250,000 loot of a Chicago mail robbery in December, 1932. Mead forfeited $10,000 bond here by ignoring his scheduled trial in Jacksonville, Fla., on a mail fraud charge.

And Mead, so the story runs, learned about Bremer's riches while engaged in putting over an alleged swindle of Martin Wunderlich, contractor, of St. Paul and Jefferson City, Mo. Wunderlich, at the latter place, made outright denial today that he had been swindled out of $50,000, as reported here. At St. Paul, the Dispatch put the swindle at $200,000. Published reports here indicated Mead had trimmed Wunderlich in a swindle over promises of Government contracts, and that Wunderlich had borrowed money from Bremer not long before the kidnaping.

Loft Candy Chief Sued for Alienation

Baltimore, April 30 (Spl.).—Charles G. Guth, president of Loft, Inc., candy manufacturers and dealers, was named defendant in a $20,000 alienation of affections suit filed here today by John M. Huppman, son-in-law of the confectionery magnate.

Huppman's suit charges that Guth "maliciously deprived Huppman of his wife's affection, comfort and society." The couple have been separated about a year, according to Richard H. Tippett, Huppman's attorney.

Recently, Tippett said, Mrs. Huppman filed suit for divorce in New York. The Huppmans have one child, a boy.

earnings varied widely, some cities reporting that the wages of skilled labor had increased more than those of common labor and others reporting opposite conditions. There were some reports of complaints from skilled labor because earnings have been reduced.

As to whether minimum wages placed in codes tended to become maximum wages, there was a diversity of response. About half the answers were in the affirmative.

About one-half the cities reporting indicated that wage differentials between districts had no adverse effect. A number of small cities in competition with nearby large cities reported a loss of business because of lack of sufficiently large differentials in their favor.

Women Gain and Lose.

Some of the responding cities reported there was an improvement in the position of women in industry and about an equal number reported that women were being replaced by men because of equality in wage rates.

The effect of trade-practice provisions upon competitors was usually described, either generally or by specific industries, as being beneficial. It was stated, however, that some "chiseling" still exists.

"A substantial minority of the cities, however," the report continued, "reported there was as yet no perceptible effect of a beneficial nature and in some instances there was reference to increasing hard feelings and friction because of allegations of violation of codes."

A considerable number of cities, but not a majority, reported a beneficial effect of trade practice provisions upon relations with consumers. There was much testimony, however, either that there had been no improvement in these relations or that there was resentment by consumers, particularly in the cities of small or moderate size. The resentment, it was reported, usually concerned price increases.

40 Per Cent Report Improvement.

About 40 per cent of the responses indicated that NRA has improved trade and industrial conditions. About 15 per cent reported benefits to a few fields, such as coal, lumber and automobile retailing. The remainder of the responses varied from statements that there had been a slight benefit to statements that industrial conditions had become more tense and it was debatable whether progress was being retarded or improved by NRA.

Some cities reported no sales resistance because of increased prices, while a majority reported varying degrees of resistance. Some Western communities reported fear of a local buyers' strike.

As to difficulties in settling of complaints with respect to violations of trade-practice provisions, adverse reports predominated, with examples of unsatisfactory results from complaints which had been filed. These statements referred to "habitual delays" after cases leave local authorities.

Recovery Is Convention Theme.

The general subject of the chamber of commerce convention will be a permanent basis of business recovery. The sessions will open today with a meeting of the National council and a banquet tonight of the International Chamber of Commerce. The general sessions will not open until tomorrow.

The National council of the Chamber of Commerce will have before it the nomination of directors to fill 17 vacancies. It also will make awards to winning cities in a fire-waste contest and in a health conservation contest. The international meeting tonight will be addressed by Secretary Roper and William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.

The views of the chamber on pending tariff legislation were put before the Senate Finance Committee yesterday by Henry I. Harriman, president of the organization.

"It seems desirable," Harriman said, "to write into the bill a brief declaration of principle to the effect that in authorizing limited reduction of customs tariff rates on imports covered by reciprocity agreements it is the intention of Congress that any reasonable protection of American industries and agriculture of benefit to any considerable section of the country should be maintained.

"We also recommend that there be in the bill definite provision for notice and hearing for representatives of the lines of business affected by any contemplated reductions in our tariff, giving them the opportunity to present facts and opinions as to the effects of any such proposed reductions.

"In the public interest and in fairness to business, some measure of certainty in reliance on Governmental policy affecting business as the tariff does is highly important. And business should not be exposed to tariff reductions without a full opportunity for a hearing."

Handlon Named To Publicity Post

Wheeling Newspaper Man in Farm Bureau Job.

Charleston, W. Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Two changes in the State Road Commission offices and appointment of a new publicity director for the State Department of Agriculture were announced today.

James B. McLaughlin, State commissioner of agriculture, announced appointment of William C. Handlon, of Wheeling, to the latter position. Handlon, former city editor of a Wheeling newspaper, took up his new work at once, succeeding Ross B. Johnston, of Morgantown. The position, McLaughlin stated, will be expanded into a general State publicity bureau.

Ernest L. Bailey, State road commissioner, announced appointment of Herman J. Thorne, of the State auditor's office, as head of the accounting office of the State Road Commission, and appointment of William S. Roberts, of Buckhannon, as assistant supervisor of transportation and public relations agents. Roberts is a former State senator and a member of the State Board of Education.

Dillinger Quartet Disarms 3 Police written statement admitting that he sold five machine guns and other deadly weapons to a Jimmie Williams for delivery to the Dillinger gangsters at St. Paul.

Williams was known to have been a companion of Tommy Carroll, who is accused of having slain a San Antonio detective last December. Carroll was thought to have been one of the Dillinger gunmen who shot their way out of a police trap at Little Bohemia, Wis., a week ago Sunday.

Rumors that Dillinger was dead as a result of wounds suffered in the escape from Little Bohemia received official notice when Melvin H. Purvis, chief of the Chicago office of the Bureau of Investigation, announced that Federal agents had been unable to verify reports. Tom McGregor, sheriff of Vilas County, where the gun battle took two lives, termed the rumor "all poppycock."

Northern Search Pushed.

The search for Dillinger, meanwhile, was being pushed by Federal investigators at St. Paul, in the northern Wisconsin woods and in other localities.

Nelson, whose identification as the slayer of a Federal agent in the Little Bohemia raid, has caused police to want him almost as badly as his chief, was reported "seen" at Marshfield, Wis., and in northern Minnesota, as well as by the humbled Chicago police.

W. Virginia to Push Sealing of Mines

Charleston, W. Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Dr. A. E. McClue, State health commissioner, today ordered a reorganization of the State water commission to carry out a program of sealing abandoned coal mines.

The program was started several weeks ago as a Federal CWA project but was transferred to the State CWA, then halted when the program ended April 1.

Approximately one-third of the abandoned mines of the State that have been emptying waste and sulphurous waters into rivers and streams have already been sealed. Dr. McClue said the water commission will direct work as a relief program. Work will be started soon in Harrison, Randolph and Barbour Counties.

Exchange Fund Is Set Up From Dollar Cut Gain

Officials Maintain Silence in Face of Treasury Account Change.

to actual stabilization as he felt the Congressional inflationists would permit. The Treasury, certainly, is fully aware that another cut in gold content would upset business and economic nerves which have been quieting down so far as fear of more dollar devaluation is concerned. So this guess would seem to be out.

More plausible is the theory that the Treasury was preparing to offset another movement of capital touof the country. Since the Treasury's operation of its stabilization fund is veiled in as much secrecy as is humanly attainable, and the operators of the fund can pay whatever they wish for francs or other currencies, or for gold, there are sundry ways in which the fund can be used to push the dollar up or down, to push francs up or down, to make it unprofitable to export gold from this side, if that is the objective.

Francs Seen on Exports.

Several times the Treasury has said that it would permit gold to be exported, on license, if the gold export point were reached. It came close to being reached about a week ago in francs. No gold was actually exported, as it happened, and the guessers guess that the Treasury does not want any to be exported.

As several learned sideline economists deduced yesterday, it is probably futile to try to guess what is up, if anything in the complete absence either of official enlightenment or of knowledge of just what policy is being pursued at the moment. Prof. George F. Warren has been seen about his haunts again in the last few days, which gives rise to more assumptions that perhaps he is figuring once more in policy after an interlude of quiescence in gold manipulation.

The Treasury's official spokesman, Herbert Gaston, was a Sphinx yesterday on which the reportorial questions beat hopelessly. Mr. Morgenthau was no more informative. Prof. Warren still hides out from the prying press.

Bond Support Minimized.

Most of the mystified outsiders took it for granted that the fund was not being set up to support the Government bond market inasmuch as the bond list has appeared lately to be able to stand up without support. The fact that the securities act has eliminated virtually all competition has made Government bonds artificially strong.

A few students of Treasury affairs noted that there is a bit more than $99,000,000 difference between the totals of the gold fund before and after the bookkeeping change. They also cited that about $100,000,000 more had vanished previously from the totals. What became of the $200,000,000 is another puzzle, since the Treasury sayeth not. The assumption is that the money was shifted to Federal Reserve Banks to meet past purchases of gold or of exchange or to be ready for new purchases.

Excess Reserves Swell.

For some time the Treasury has been feeding out gold certificates to the reserve banks. This, as well as operation of the stabilization fund, contributes to swelling the reserve system's already record-breaking accumulation of excess reserves, now so vast——verging on $2,000,000,000—that the last Federal Reserve Bulletin devoted much space to urging Congress to supply automatic brakes against the danger of a runaway expansion of bank loans and deposits erected on this base.

The stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 is made up of the bulk of the "profit" resulting from Mr. Roosevelt edict creating the 59.06-cent (in gold value) dollar. The Treasury's daily statements report the item as "Increment resulting from reduction in the weight of the gold dollar—$2,810,841,548.87."

Transportation Rivalry Draws Eastman's Fire

Greater U. S. Regulation Urged Before Rivers, Harbors Congress.

By Raymond Clapper.

A surplus of transportation facilities in the country should cause caution about expanding them further, Joseph B. Eastman, Federal coordinator of transportation, told inland waterway enthusiasts at the opening of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress yesterday.

Discussion during the day's proceedings in the Mayflower ballroom ranged around the rivalry between the railroads and water transportation and Mr. Eastman predicted that in any fight for survival the railroads would have the edge.

But rather than push the doctrine of survival of the fittest to the point where it might demoralize and endanger the whole transportation structure, Mr. Eastman urged greater Federal regulation in the interests of all forms of transportation in order that each might be sure of its place in the sun.

Doubts Projects' Value.

The blunt-spoken expert of the Interstate Commerce Commission who now is engaged in a gigantic study of transportation coordination told the Rivers and Harbors Congress frankly that he thought some waterway projects were of doubtful value and that Congress should scrutinize the economic soundness of each before it was undertaken.

"The question is whether the new facilities will provide cheaper or better transportation for the public than the agencies which already exist," he said.

However, Maj. Gen. T. A. Ashburn, president of the Government-owned Inland Waterways Corporation, charged that the Interstate Commerce Commission has directed its efforts at maintaining a railroad rate structure built upon the idea of a railroad monopoly of transportation. This, he declared, had resulted in a distorted economic balance in which the Middle West particularly had suffered.

Virginia Works To Be Finished

Projects Left by CWA Approved by ERA Official.

Richmond, April 30 (Spl.).—The 1,632 unfinished CWA projects in Virginia are eligible for completion by the new works division of the Virginia Emergency Relief Administration, J. M. Ribble, chief engineer of the division, said today.

There are about $400,000 worth of materials left over from the 1,632 unfinished CWA projects, Mr. Ribble said, and this will enable a number of the unfinished projects to be completed.

Home of Blossom Queen Built By "Film Queen's" Ancestors

"Llangollen" Once Estate of Katharine Hepburn's Forefathers.

Upperville, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Llangollen, the beautiful estate at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains, near here, of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, queen of Winchester's Apple Blossom Festival this week, was the home of the paternal ancestors of Katharine Hepburn, recently chosen queen of the screen for 1933.

The fact that the estate, for many years the home of the Powell family, of Loudoun County, can boast of being connected with two queens adds to the prestige of Llangollen, as among the many historical places of Virginia.

While Mrs. Whitney, the mistress of Llangollen since 1930, prepares to assume the crown of royalty as queen of the 1934 Apple Blossom Festival, filmland and film fans are equally interested in the impending "battle" for supremacy in screenland between Miss Hepburn and the Russian star, Anna Sten.

Miss Hepburn never lived at Llangollen, having been born in Connecticut. Her father's great-grandfather, Cuthbert Powell, owned the estate and built the mansion in 1814. Numbered also among Miss Hepburn's paternal ancestry were men outstanding in their communities during the Revolutionary days, and who represented their counties and districts both in the State House of Burgesses and the Federal Congress.

'Eye for Eye' Law Not True Among Iriquois Tribesmen

Prosecutors Pleaded Life of Slayer Be Spared, Kin Pay Wampum.

A murderer has been found guilty; he is sentenced by his relatives, not by a judge; the prosecutors plead for his freedom, not his death.

If such a thing happened at District Supreme Court, there is one man in Washington who could cite a precedent for such procedure—one that might well have happened in this vicinity.

That man is J. N. B. Hewitt, of the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution. He knows that this paradox of the law was once held necessary for the protection of society as the execution of a Dillinger is considered necessary now.

This picture of the law is from the tribal procedure of the Iroquois, the Six Nations which dominated Northeastern America before the coming of the white man.

Judged by Chiefs.

Here is Mr. Hewitt's picture of the trial of a chief of the Iroquois league who has committed murder and has been judged guilty before a council of chiefs acting somewhat in the manner of a coroner's inquest.

The next step was up to the kinsmen of the slayer, those of the victim and a neutral group in the tribe. Under the law the murderer's kinsmen might offer a stated amount of wampum to the dead man's relatives, or they could refrain from doing so.

If the wampum was not offered, the slayer was an outlaw who could be killed at any time by anybody. It was useless for him to flee. He was an outlaw everywhere, to be killed on sight, to furnish an extra scalp for some warrior's girdle.

But if this happened, the slayer of the outlaw must be killed by the kinsmen of the outlaw. This would have started a pyramiding wave of vengeance which would have wiped out the entire tribe.

Pleaded for Life.

Rather than have this done, the neutral group reversed the practice of the modern prosecutor. It was the practice of this neutral group to plead on bended knees with the kinsmen of the slayer to pay the required wampum for the common good.

This task of the neutral body was to save, not to condemn, for the good of society. The great force of public opinion was brought into play to save the man's life.

The kinsmen of the slain man also had the right to refuse the proffered pledge of wampum. But they almost invariably accepted it because of the frightful consequence of their insistence of their right of a life for a life.

So, Mr. Hewitt is one person who knows that the old law of a tooth for a tooth was considered too harsh for the public weal.

Fifth District Sales at Retail Increase 27%

General Spring Business Rise Reported as Contrast to 1933.

Richmond, April 30 (AP).—Sales of 30 leading department stores in the Fifth Federal Reserve District increased 27.1 per cent during the first quarter of 1934, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported today, in a comparison with the sales of the first three months of 1933.

The bank reported also that the volume of general spring business during March and early April was above seasonal levels. It was in "marked contrast to trade a year earlier when the banking holiday and frozen funds in closed banks restricted nearly all business," said the bank's general summary of business for the monthly period.

The District of Columbia and the five States of the district, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina, were covered.

The most striking phase of the report was that on the record of retail trade. This record was described as "splendid" by William W. Hoxton, chairman and Federal Reserve agent here, and author of the report.

Gain Over Last Two Years.

"Thirty of the Fifth District's leading stores averaged 51.8 per cent larger sales than in March, 1933, and also showed a gain of 8.3 over sales in March, 1932, when there were no banking disturbances as in 1933," Mr. Hoxton reported.

Member banks were reported to have had a slightly higher monthly total of time deposits than in 1933, and commercial failures in the district "continued to show a notable improvement." The bank reported "only 50 insolvencies" in March, a decrease of 40.5 per cent under the 84 reported for March a year ago.

The bank said, however, that the suspension of CWA work increased unemployment in the District, "with relatively few workers thus released being absorbed in private industry."

"Building permits issued in 31 Fifth District cities in March, 1934, showed some progress from the very low figures reported in March last year," the report said, showing an increase of 11.8 per cent.

Agriculture in the District got a late start due to extremely cold weather in February and most of March. Frequent rains kept the ground too wet to cultivate during the entire spring, the report said.

A seasonal increase was reported in coal production, and the textile mills in the Carolinas and Virginia increased operations somewhat in March over February, but did not quite attain the level of March last year.

Spot cotton prices were reported to have sagged slightly between the middle of March and the middle of April, and tobacco sales were reported to have been far above 1932-33 sales, with averages prices this season materially better for the types composing the bulk of the Fifth District crop.

Mr. Hoxton said wholesale trade last month not only made seasonal gains over February business, but far exceeded the volume of business done in March last year.

Fete to Mark Lee, Jackson's Last Meeting

Bivouac Fire Will Burn Again on Site of Final War Council.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—The last meeting of Gens. Robert E. Lee and "Stonewall" Jackson, 71 years ago tomorrow night, will be commemorated at 8 p. m. tomorrow by ceremonies at a bivouac fire on the same spot where the two Confederate leaders conferred three-quarters of a century ago.

Plans have been made to hold the ceremonies in the recreation hall at the Chancellorsville CCC Camp in event of rain. Sponsors of the memorial program are the local chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and officials of the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Park.

The Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, rector of Fredericksburg Methodist Church, wil deliver the invocation. Mrs. W. W. Butzner, president of the Fredericksburg chapter, U. D. C., will introduce Mrs. Severn Nottingham, of Orange, president of the Virginia Division U. D. C., who will present Dr. Douglas Freeman, of Richmond, noted Virginia orator and historical authority, who will deliver the principal address.

The Fredericksburg High School Band, under the direction of Prof. John Van Deventer, will play.

Seventy-one years before the hour the program begins the two Southern leaders sat in a drizzling rain before a small fire of pine branches to plan the strategic movement which released the Confederate forces from the vice of two Northern armies, resulted in the rout of the Federal right wing, and brought Jackson's death, shot down by his own soldiers.

Young Mexican Appears Today At Loew's Fox

Precedes Film of Father; Frohman to See Press; About Showshops.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Any one happening into suite 101 in the Hotel Willard last evening between the hours of 5 and 7 would have discovered a pensive and slightly bewildered young woman completely surrounded by a milling crowd of motion picture executives, newspaper photographers, press agents, radio personalities, news reporters, a few of the laity, and here and there a smattering of dramatic editors.

The young woman who seemed just a bit puzzled by all this was a strikingly perfect example of typical brunette Mexican beauty—jet black hair, delicately arched brows, olive skin, deep and extremely dark eyes and full, red lips that parted occasionally in a flashing smile over large, even, white teeth. Her lack of an enraptured and complete comprehension of the situation might easily be accounted for by the fact that she speaks and understands only a few words of English.

Being plumped down into a roomful of foreign strangers falls something short of affording the utmost in mental and physical exhilaration, as anybody who has undergone the experience will tell you.

"Pancho" Villa's Daughter.

The young woman, of course, was Senorita Celia Villa, 19-year-old daughter of the late "Pancho" Villa, whose proper place in Mexican history perhaps has not yet been definitely and finally established.

Senorita Villa's presence in the Capital, it need hardly be said, is not wholly detached from the comparatively imminent engagement of "Viva Villa" at Loew's Palace Theater, in which Wallace Beery appears in the role of the revolutionary leader, who has has been picturesquely described as the "Mexican Robin Hood." After viewing the film she is of the opinion that Wallace Beery "must be a great and good man, like my father."

Although Senorita Villa is making personal appearances at Loew's Fox Theater today, she herself stresses the fact that, unlike her countrywomen, Lupe Velez, Raquel Torres, Dolores Del Rio and the rest, she is neither a singer nor a dancer. She is, however, entirely willing to submit to a public introduction and one suspects nurtures an overweening ambition to become a star of the cinema.

Remembers Her Dad.

Senorita Celia is a daughter of the much-married Villa by his third wife, Librada Pena. At the time of the revolutionary chieftain's death, she was living with him and several stepsisters on the Villa hacienda in Chihuahua. She was 7 years old at the time and remembers her father distinctly and the great grief of the poor people when, upon journeying to Paral, his family made known that he had been killed and not taken prisoner as they had at first been told.

One learns from Mrs. Charles H. Lawrence, of El Paso, Tex., Senorita Villa's chaperon and interpreter, that following her father's death Celia was sent to a boarding school by an uncle, later given a home by an aunt, but finally was driven by poverty to become a maid, governess and hat-check girl in a border night club at Juarez.

It was here that she was discovered by a representative of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company and placed under contract for her present tour of personal appearances.

On Three-Month Tour.

She has just finished a two-week engagement in New York, a week in Philadelphia and arrived here yesterday afternoon after a similar engagement in Baltimore. On Tuesday she leaves Washington for Texas and will spend a month in the Lone-Star State fulfilling theatrical engagements. Her tour is to last a total of three months.

Senorita Villa gives a first impression of being an utterly demure young woman of soft voice and gentle speech. Perhaps I have already intimated as much. There are moments, however, when a slight curl of the lip and a flash like distant lightning in her eye give one the notion that upon suitable provocation she might flame into all the fiery temper and florid action of her famous daddy.

Personally, I should be just as well pleased to be well away from there when it happened!

Incidentally, following the reception in Senorita Villa's honor last evening, "Viva Villa" was accorded a preview screening in the private projection room of the Fox Film Exchange for the local press and a small company of specially invited guests. There are those who have seen the picture who rate it even ahead of "The House of Rothschild"—but only from the viewpoint of mass entertainment, not magnitude of production, historical accuracy or literary worth. If there is any such thing as literary worth in a movie script.

Frohman Here Tomorrow.

Preliminary to his coming to town next Sunday night, May 6, with a distinguished group of players to present the widely heralded Actors' Fund Benefit in the National Theater, Daniel Frohman, dean of the American theater, who has been the motivating power in the conduct of the affairs of the Actors' Fund of America for more than half a century, will be in Washington tomorrow and will receive the local dramatic desks in the fund's headquarters, Room 537, Munsey Building, at 3 p. m.

On next Sunday he will return to present on the gala bill Otis Skinner in "Reminiscences;" Frances Starr and Effie Shannon in a scene from "The Merry Wives of Windsor;" Eddie Dowling, the jester of the Democratic National party, as Master of Ceremonies; Elsie Ferguson, who will make a brief return to the stage; Robert Emmett Keane and Claire Whitney in a comedy skit, "Room 909;" Bill Robinson, who will live up to his reputation as the world's greatest tap dancer; Fannie Ward, the miracle woman; Philip Merivale and Gladys Cooper, in a scene from "Cynara;" Fred Keating and Herbert Rawlinson, who will contribute a comedy touch; Tony Wons, assisted by Peggy Keenan and Sandra Phillips, in a scene from "The Merchant of Venice;" George Hall's Orchestra, Ken Murray and the Club Michel Revue, Tito Guizar and many others being arranged for in New York.

Keane Waters is staging the production for Mr. Frohman.

We wish to take this occasion to extend hearty thanks to Mr. E. S. Wilson, of the Wilson Line, operating pleasure craft on the Potomac during the summer months, and to Mr. Leonard B. Schloss, vice president and general manager of Glen Echo Park, for season courtesy cards to the welcome relief from the city's heat which their respective enterprises afford. If they think the passes won't be used they are practically ne plus ultra, non compos mentis, or something.

"THE TOPSY-TURVEY GIRLS." Hirst-Lake production, featuring Frank X. Silk, Lou Costello, Russell Trent, Lillian Harrison, Dorothy Ahearn and Claire Stone. Produced under the direction of Frank Bryant. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Fast-moving comedy, with the several exhibits separated by feminine charmers, singly and in groups, characterizes "The Topsy-Turvy Girls."

Billy "Scratch" Wallace contributes a goodly number of hearty laughs to the program, Frank X. Silk somewhat more, and Lou Costello, one of the few white-face, plain-clothed comics, the most. The three gentlemen are equally good—and plenty funny, too—and any impression of good, better, or best, must be based solely on the relative number of appearances.

Although doubling as tenor for the week, Russell Trent finds his forte as foil for Mr. Costello. With the former's fluency of speech and the latter's "dumbness," the combination is a "natural" for sustained comedy. Lew Denny is the other straight.

On the other side of the bill, Bee Baxter is lead-off woman, followed by Dorothy (formerly just Dot) Ahearn and Lillian Harrison, who is playing Washington for the first time. Miss Harrison's work is of the slow-motion type—but it is just as devastating as the more animated revelations of the Misses Ahearn and Baxter. Ann Costello also displays her wiles.

Claire Stone is billed as the diva for the week, but for frequency of appearance Aileen Dale has more claim on that distinction.

Stage Manager Bryant has gone "stupendous" again with his cabaret-finale to the first act, in which the entire company participates.

Villa's Daughter Is Visitor

Preceding by several weeks the local showing of "Viva Villa," the motion picture based on the life of her father, Senorita Celia Villa, 19-year-old daughter of Pancho Villa, one-time stormy petrel of Mexico, is spending a few days in the Capital under the protective wing of the Loew interests. She is appearing in person at Loew's Fox Theater today.

236 New School Buildings Sought

West Virginian Estimates Cost at $8,228,147.

Charleston, W. Va., April 30 (Spl.).—W. W. Trent, State superintendent of schools, recommends the construction of 236 new school buildings in all of the 55 counties of the State. They are needed, he says, to put West Virginia "in the front line" in education.

Trent's estimates are based upon reports of building requirements submitted by the 55 county superintendents. He does not know where the money would come from, but declares it should be furnished by the State or the Federal Governments, or both.

The building program calls for 106 six-room buildings, 69 eight-room schools and 64 twelve-room buildings, at a total estimated cost of $8,228,147.

Codes Declared Only a Beginning

Consumers' Officer Calls Them "Right Step."

Richmond, April 30 (AP).—Lucy R. Mason, secretary of the National Consumers League, characterized National recovery act codes as a step in the right direction "but only a beginning," in an interview here yesterday.

She said that the recovery program was "too much dominated by the same business and industrial interests which consistently fought labor legislation in the past and resisted every effort of labor to organize."

Modification of the act is needed in two respects, she said. An increase in the number and strength of consumers' organizations and the reorganization and enforcement of NRA codes with more regard for labor, are the steps she advocated.

Shenandoah to Organize Cooperative Methods.

Dayton, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—The Antioch College system of cooperative education, which has aroused so much discussion along the educators throughout the Middle West, will be introduced into Virginia schools next year at Shenandoah College here.

The Antioch system, which calls for all students to engage in some employment in addition to their academic work, is still in its experimental stage, but Wade S. Miller, youthful head of Shenandoah, sees a bright future for the system.

New jobs will be created at the college for the students, with the school enlisting the aid of the town merchants to afford the experiment all the opportunities available in this section.

Virginia Confederate Veterans Preparing to Attend Reunion

Average Age on Rolls Is 90; Go to Chattanooga June 6 to 8.

Richmond, April 30 (AP).—It will be a venerable delegation from Virginia which attends the forty-fourth annual reunion of the United Confederate Veterans this year—the pension rolls showing an average age among its veterans of 90.

"The youngest man on our Confederate pension rolls is 86," said John H. Johnson, chief clerk of the pension department in the State comptroller's office.

The oldest man on the rolls is not a veteran. "He is a colored man, living in Richmond," Mr. Johnson said. He is Zebedee Scott, a servant during the War Between the States, who is "at least" 111 years old.

But these venerable veterans with heads and uniforms of gray, are planning vigorously for their reunion in Chattanooga, Tenn., June 6, 7 and 8.

With them will go Gen. Homer Atkinson, of Petersburg, commander of the United Confederate Veterans, having served since his election in the Richmond reunion two years ago. They will leave here on the commander in chief's special train.

Among the leaders preparing for the participation of Virginia's veterans is Gen. William McK. Evans, commander of the Department of the Army of Northern Virginia.

Gen. Evans today said it is hoped that eight or ten of the veterans at Lee Camp here would attend. There are only 30-odd at the camp now.

The ranks of these soldiers of Virginia are thinning more rapidly than ever, Mr. Johnson said, pointing to the rolls which now bear 705 names. The rolls 25 years ago numbered approximately 15,000.

Largest Fleet of AIR-CONDITIONED TRAINS in the World

THIS spring, every principal through train on the Pennsylvania Railroad is being air-conditioned!

The Pennsylvania took the lead in air-conditioning last year, when its great hourly fleet to Philadelphia and New York was completely air-conditioned.

This year the lead lengthens. Heat, dust and noise are locked out of every principal train, East and West. Wherever you go on your trip West, there's no more weather when you take the Pennsylvania.

For travelers to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and every other big mid-western city, that means perfect comfort—even in the hottest weather. Try one of these clean, cool trains on your next trip—and enjoy real air-conditioning.

NEW SCHEDULES TO THE WEST

The trip to Chicago is a really pleasant interlude when you take the LIBERTY LIMITED. It's air-conditioned throughout, of course. There is always something new on the menu to tempt your appetite. The de luxe (but inexpensive) private bedrooms—the pleasant club and lounge car—the courteous service—everything helps to make your hours on board pass quickly and pleasantly. . . .

Similarly fast service on the Liberty Limited to ST. LOUIS and DETROIT. Try the Liberty Limited—or one of its famous running mates—next time you travel West. Similarly convenient schedules eastbound.

Share in Mate's Estate Awarded Mrs. Loughran

Florida Marriage Is Valid, Says Court, Despite District Law.

The United States Supreme Court ruled yesterday that Mrs. Ruth Loughran, twice divorced, could share in the estate of her second husband, the late Daniel Loughran, jr., who had a one-tenth interest of the million-dollar-fortune left by his father, Daniel Loughran, sr., tobacco merchant.

The court's decision upset a previous ruling by the District Court of Appeals, which held that Mrs. Loughran was not legally married to her second husband, according to District law, because she had been divorced by her first on the grounds of misconduct.

"Equity does not demand," said yesterday's opinion, delivered by Justice Brandeis, "that those seeking relief under it should have led blameless lives. Neither the doctrine of clean hands nor any kindred principle on which courts refuse relief, is a principle here."

Mrs. Loughran was divorced in 1924 by her first husband, Henry Daye, of Washington, who named Daniel Loughran, jr., as corespondent. The District law forbids a woman divorced for misconduct to marry again. The Loughran marriage, however, took place in Florida two years later, after which the couple moved to Alexandria. They were divorced there in 1929, and in 1931 Loughran died, leaving part of his alimony unpaid, according to the widow.

She sued to obtain part of the estate. By its decision yesterday, the court calls her second marriage valid because it was a bona fide ceremony which took place in Florida, where there is no law preventing remarriage of those divorced for misconduct.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Doctor Coon Rides a Watermobile

By D. Sam Cox.

One night after the Bear Family had had a big supper, and Bettie had washed up the dishes and put away the things, she came out of the kitchen and found all of the folks just lazying around and not talking of anything in particular. Blackie was leaning back in his chair smoking and blowing rings into the air. Billie Possum was looking funny at Dr. Coon, and kept grinning and fidgeting about like he wanted to say something. When Bettie came in she noticed how he was doing, and so she said:

"Well, Mr. Possum, you look like you are thinking of something funny, so you had as well tell us about it."

"It is a little funny, for a fact," said Billie, "but it didn't seem to be much funny to my friend, Dr. Coon, the day he landed at Bear Creek."

Free Ride Story.

"Now Billie, you don't have to tell everything you know," said Dr. Coon.

"Maybe not," said Billie Possum, "but it does seem like I have just got to tell this. You and Blackie and Jocko and everybody have been telling some stories that even the cubs have trouble in believing, and so it looks like you might let me tell the real truth about the free ride that a friend of mine got one night."

"Yes, do tell it," said Betty; "I am just aching to hear a good story tonight."

"Well, if it has got to be told," said Dr. Coon, "I had better tell it myself, and then it will be told right." And this is what he told:

"I used to live miles and miles down the Creek and near the house of a bad man who always had lots of nice geese and chickens and other things that I liked to eat. Every now and then I would go over to his house, but somehow, every time I went he was asleep, and besides, it was always dark when I got there, and I never got a chance to see him, so we never made the acquaintance of each other.

"I hated to make these long trips over to his house all for nothing, and so I would generally go around to his chicken house and get me a bit of chicken for my supper. It seemed that this man didn't have any more chicken than he wanted, though, of course, I didn't know it; but, anyway, he got him a dog and had him sleep out near his chicken house to keep anybody from getting any more of his little old chickens.

Had Gone to Bed.

"I didn't know anything about the dog, either; if I had I never would have ridden that alligator. I never would have seen Blackie and the rest of you, and so I guess it's all right about the dog. But I'm getting ahead of my story. Anyway, one night I thought I would try again to see this man and talk chicken to him; but somehow when I got to his house it was most midnight, and he had gone to bed. I didn't want to wake him up and ask him to catch the chicken for me, so I climbed over the fence right easy and started around towards the hen house.

"I had just got around to the kitchen steps when I heard the most awful growl a dog ever made. I forgot all about the chicken, and all I could think of was 'Home, Sweet Home,' and I turned around, and started on a good run for that very place. But that dog could do more things than growl, and I want to tell you that there was some sort of a foot race through that woods for a mile r two.

"It was a pretty cold night, and I know how a dog hates to get in cold water, so I headed for the creek. When I got there I jumped in and dived down under the water and swam for a little way before I came up. When I came back to the top, there right at me was a big log floating along on the water, and I climbed up on it and laid down for a rest. The dog was on the bank, barking, but he wouldn't go into the water. The log seemed to be lots warmer than the water, and so after lying there a while I got so comfortable that I dropped off to sleep.

"I must have slept a long time, for when I woke up it was getting pretty light. As soon as it got a little lighter I noticed that the log was floating up stream. Now you know that if you move up stream you have to swim; you can't just float. And this log was certainly going up the stream. I shook myself to see if I wasn't dreaming. But no; I was wide awake, and that log was going up stream. I raised up on my hind feet to look ahead, and what I saw nearly made me fall into the water. The log had a great big head, and the head had two great big eyes, and those eyes were looking back at me like they were going to burn me up.

Log Takes Dive.

"Then the log took a deep dive into the water, and your friend, Doctor Coon, got his feet wet again. I swam as fast as I could to the bank of the creek, for when I found that I had been riding all night on an alligator's back, I knew that he had just found it out, too, and I didn't know but what he might decide that he wanted a nice fat coon for his breakfast.

"When I got to land, I made a quick jump for the first big tree I saw, and I didn't stop till I was most to the top, and then I stopped because I heard somebody laughing. I looked up above my head, and there sat Billie Possum most killing himself laughing, for he had seen me leave the alligator's back and swim to the bank. Then I introduced myself to him and told him all about how it happened.

"Of course, Billie had to grin till I thought his teeth would fall out; but he was mighty nice to me and gave me some breakfast, and then after breakfast he went with me to hunt a house. We found the one that I have been living in ever since, and where I was when Blackie came to the Creek. Now Billie, if you want to laugh you may laugh again."

And Billie laughed.

Wine, Women, And Song.

If he said what he is said to have said, a group of Portland, Oreg., churchgoers is going to demand that President Roosevelt, or Secretary Wallace, or somebody, remove from office a certain Prof. R. G. Tugwell. Perhaps that name is already vaguely familiar to our readers.

It seems that Dr. Tugwell said something that so got under the skins of the good Oregonians that they will stand for him no longer. His words had nothing to do with pigs or potatoes. They conveyed no challenge to the established order. If Dr. Wirt knew about this insidious pronouncement, even he did not deem it worthy of comment. Not so the outraged Oregonians. In their own phrase (and how familiar it seemed, appearing in the newspaper on the same day as an account of a Ku Klux Klan meeting at Annapolis) his awful words were "unworthy to represent the people and untrue to the standards and traditions of the American people." We withhold the text no longer. "One of the oldest and quietest roads to contentment," so runs the quotation, "lies through the conventional trinity of wine, women, and song."

Quiet, contentment, wine, women, song? Alas, the Oregonians are right. Untrue to our traditions, all of them. Perhaps the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture may be saved by an appointment as Ambassador to France, or some such ungodly country. But here at home he seems to have overstepped the limit. At last he has proved himself a revolutionary. He has had the effrontery to advocate tolerance.

Invitation To Pietro.

It seems incredible that there should be only two hurdy-gurdies in Washington. But then we do not recall an overabundance of these melodious machines in other cities we have visited the past few years. Take Boston, for example, where every spring the strains of "Il Trovatore" dwindled into the more spirited "Wearin' o' the Green" as the Pietro Battagliolas of that ancient city pushed their way along the crooked streets from the North End's little Italy to the more Celtic regions south of the Dover street bridge.

There, as here, changing times have dwindled the ranks of these troubadours until hardly anything is left of the once sturdy race of the hurdy-gurdy crankers of our childhood. In New York, too, and in all the large cities, the organ grinders have given up their calling, one by one.

It's sad to think of this. Pietro Battagliola's invitation to come out to Q (street) in lilac time, that appeared in yesterday's Post, probably fell on tone-deaf ears. Owner of one of the only two hand organs in this city, this seventy-year-old man, who has spent a lifetime grinding out melodies under windows for the pennies and dimes of a grateful world, is convinced that his art is no longer respected or wanted. There was a time—but now, "Da radio and da phonograph, dey maka me seeck."

But there will be some of us always ready to toss a coin to a hurdy-gurdy, remembering from our younger days. In many an eastern city it was never spring until the sound of a street organ came floating over the noise of traffic. It was sweet music then. It is sweet music now. Or in memory we like sentimentally to think of it as such.

All of the hurdy-gurdy men kept some old tune on the roll, to which they interminably turned back after their routine of the modern and the popular. Over the Newspaper Rows and Market streets at evening they used to send their song. To the city bred no skylark ever lilted so beautifully the music of the vernal urge.

Come down from Q to E street some evening, Pietro. We're saving a dime for your song.

Utopia By Formula.

Dr. Will Durant has thrilled naive New York with a list of ten nostrums which he guarantees will turn America into a utopia. Let the country's social system assimilate these, either by legislation or "official encouragement," and the Nation will be saved.

Well, Dr. Durant still has a following. Inappropriately named for William James, this sage is not to be confused with William C. Durant of motor fame and the American Cottonpicker Corporation. The present Durant is he of Great Neck, Long Island, whose "Story of Philosophy" attempted to popularize the caviar of metaphysics for the general.

One wonders, however, what will be the reaction to his nostrums between Marietta, Ohio, and Girard, Kans., where the Durant dilutions of Spinoza are revered by thousands of purchasers who have yet to read them. He makes now such novel proposals as physical education, ethics by commission-fiat, health and intelligence tests for immigrants, the encouragement of large families among the worthy and their discouragement among the unfit. It is all astonishingly simple and unpleasantly reminiscent. Not even prohibition has cured the quaint belief that we can legislate ourselves back into the Garden of Eden.

The High Wage Policy.

Obviously the time is approaching when the Administration must consider seriously the economic consequences of the wage policies that are being forced upon codified industries. It must face the question of how far wage increases and reduction of hours can be financed out of a smaller reservoir of profits. It must ask whether labor can be permanently benefited and employment stimulated by insistence upon policies that threaten bankruptcy to private industry. Some industries and individual concerns are in a position to pay higher wages than others but blanket increases in labor costs eventually reach a very definite maximum.

The warning of the Durable Goods Industries Committee against blanket wage increases and reductions in hours can not be dismissed, therefore, as a selfish complaint or even as a special case of hardship. The textile industries, which have cooperated in increasing their unit labor costs under the codes, by spreading work and raising minimum wage rates, are also in trouble. For a time they were able to expand operations in face of higher prices for their output. Now, however, recessions are in evidence.

Prices have been cut on some lines as a result of consumer resistance and declining orders, while the cotton code authorities are planning to ask for a temporary curtailment of production applicable to the entire industry. It is evident that industries with accumulating stocks of high-priced goods must resist further additions to labor costs. They are more likely to suspend operations than to institute further reductions in working hours without commensurate pay cuts.

Apparently the chief obstacle to a rational consideration of labor problems is due to a widespread belief that the proportion of national income paid as wages to labor should be and can be increased by governmental decree. The conviction that profits absorb an excessive share of the Nation's income is an article of faith with organized labor, which has found embodiment in some of the NRA codes.

The earnings and profits record of the country's industrial corporations during the past few years do not sustain this particular theory. They reveal the serious inroads that depression has made upon the capital reserves of industry. Ability to resist a prolonged period of no-profit production has been seriously weakened by the heavy losses already incurred. Thus, the deficit in the aggregate net income of all corporations reporting to the Bureau of Internal Revenue reached the imposing figure of over $8,000,000,000 during the two years 1931 and 1932 (after payment of income taxes but before payment of dividends).

With liberal allowance for the deficiencies of these totals as a measure of profit-making capacity, it remains apparent that there is no great volume of reserve funds available for financing a wage-raising program in advance of an industrial upturn. So long as industry is privately owned and carried on for profit, there will be well-defined limits to the increases in labor and other costs that employers can assume. The result of forcing advances beyond the limits of economic reason will inevitably be reduction in sales and in the volume of employment. Industrial recovery, in short, can not be achieved by methods which threaten industrial stability.

May Day.

Fifty years ago a meeting was held by the Federation of Organized Trades and Trades Unions in the United States and Canada at which a resolution was adopted seeking to turn the first day of May from a holiday of nature to a holiday of human rights. In the half-century following that first organized American demand for the 8-hour day, bloodshed and rioting have more often marked this semi-holiday than gay festivals of flowers and baskets. There are many who lament the change from gayety and laughter around a beribboned pole. But the focus of industrial life can not shift from village green to mass-production factory without similar shifts in the form and character of social manifestations.

This morning troops are standing by in troubled Paris. In Spain the civil guard awaits the calling of a general strike. Moscow and Berlin, on the other hand, will vie with each other in making the day a mass demonstration in behalf of, instead of against, the governments in power. In this country, in spite of our responsibility for the modern May Day, both Communists and Fascists will be on the whole happily ignored. Of course there will be a police concentration at Union Square, New York, where the initiated will dance around an oratorical may pole of invective against the established order of things.

May Day has changed in meaning and manner since a rustic Chaucer sang of "floures freshe and braunches and blome." So has the world and man. There are indications of a desire to return to the maypole and the flowery crowning of a Queen of the May. But this pleasant revival of a medieval custom, with song and laughter from Canterbury days, is difficult to achieve in our mechanistic world. And it is not a bad idea that there should be a day dedicated to the ebullition of social steam. When we romanticize over the vanished joys of "Merrie England" we are apt to forget Piers Plowman, and the fact that there was a May Day revolt in London over four centuries ago.

Unofficial Diplomacy.

Dr. James Brown Scott, secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, makes a thought-provoking observation in the annual report of that organization, just issued from its headquarters on Jackson place.

The growth of "exaggerated nationalism," he points out, is making it increasingly difficult for governments to deal temperately and constructively with their international problems. But these very difficulties are bringing larger opportunities to the foundation to conduct research and reach informal solutions of international problems "which unofficially find their way into the policies of governments."

In other words, the authoritarian state, repressing individual initiative in the national field, is tending to encourage its growth in international relations, traditionally a function in which the state brooked no interference by private citizens. Dr. Scott calls the development "as surprising as it was unexpected." Whether it is desirable that governments should be forced by nationalism to rely on "unofficial instruments of international policy" is not so certain.

In Terms Of Jobs?

Secretary Ickes announces that the PWA has now actually expended $1,000,000,000 of the $3,300,000,000 allotted for public works construction. As the chief objective of this program is supposed to be the constructive creation of jobs, the public is naturally eager to learn how much employment has been provided by the billion-dollar outlay. In view of the controversy that rages over the cost of emergency employment on public works, as compared with direct relief, such information is needed for future guidance. Unfortunately, it is stated that the PWA has made no direct estimates of numbers employed on Federal and non-Federal projects.

In a recent report to the Senate, the PWA estimated that 4,428,000 men had received employment through National recovery agencies, but over 3,800,000 of them were attached to the Civil Works Administration. It ought to be possible to obtain fairly accurate information concerning the numbers directly engaged on useful and constructive Federal and non-Federal projects. The increase in indirect employment resulting from the production and transportation of materials for construction is of course not easily determined.

However, an Administration that has undertaken the ambitious statistical tasks essential to execution of its recovery program should be capable of estimating accurately the cost per man of the employment openings afforded by public works. To have spent what we have lavished on the provision of employment, and still to be in the dark as to the relative value of different outlays in creating jobs, is a rather stiff indictment of the "planned economy."

Intermediate Credit Bill.

The Glass bill, authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks to make intermediate credit loans directly to industrial borrowers has been approved by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The conservative provisions of this measure will be far from pleasing to many of those who have been arguing that employment would expand and business recovery would be amazingly facilitated by extension of Government loans to industries hampered by lack of working capital.

No doubt there are some concerns handicapped by lack of intermediate credit, as a result of the prolonged depression, although they remain good credit risks. But it is very doubtful whether any large number have been forced to curtail profitable activities for lack of credits to supply necessary working capital. Many persons who make this charge are really in search of Government subsidies for industries that are poor credit risks and would have to be carried at expense of the taxpayer.

Senator Glass is undoubtedly fully aware of this fact and is trying to forestall plans to lend Government funds in the form of intermediate credit advances to "meritorious" industries, without proper safeguards against loss. His bill carefully protects the Federal Reserve Banks against indiscriminate extension of loans. It provides that in exceptional circumstances, when it appears to the satisfaction of a Federal Reserve Bank that an established industry is unable to obtain requisite financial assistance on a reasonable basis from the usual sources, the Federal Reserve Banks may make loans to or purchase obligations of such business for the purpose of providing working capital. If loans made by other financial institutions are discounted or purchased by the Reserve Banks, the original lender must, moreover, assume 20 per cent of the risks of loss.

This intermediate credit proposal recalls the earlier agitation which resulted in an amendment to the Federal Reserve act, permitting Reserve banks to make direct commercial loans to industries and to individuals. Little recourse was had to this permissive grant, since it soon became evident that the trouble lay not in the unwillingness of the banks to provide credits but in the unsound status of would-be borrowers.

Unquestionably charges of an alleged dearth of intermediate credits are likewise exaggerated, and our banking machinery is held responsible for conditions that it can not control. Solvent business concerns have in the past succeeded in securing various kinds of credits to satisfy their needs, without special provisions for intermediate credits. Unless reasonable safeguards are to be set aside and needy borrowers given subsidies at public expense, there is no reason for anticipating any sudden expansion of intermediate credit loans in the near future.

The Army Air Corps.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the Army Air Corps can not perform efficiently and safely during peace times, in the comparatively simple task of carrying the mail, what could we expect from it in war? "They did not know the routes." What would war have to do with making them more familiar? Might it not be supposed that they would find many uncharted routes in actual warfare? What about instruments? Why are they not equipped? Whose duty is it to draw up specifications? Somebody was at fault long before the boys started to fly the mails! If they were not accustomed to night flying, must we assume that they will confine their war activities to about the same hours as those used for training?

It appears that somebody in authority has been grossly negligent. The air service is the most important of our National defense and upon its complete competence depends our National safety. We don't care a rap who carries the air mail, but we do care most pointedly about our ability to navigate the air when we go into this next war that seems to be encroaching upon us. It would seem that one of the items on the reform agenda of the Federal Government might well be the rehabilitation of the United States Army, with special reference to the Air Corps. W. C. PARDUE.

A Southern Democrat Speaks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read The Post every morning. I am a retired editor myself, and you can imagine how interested I am in editorials.

I just read your editorial on April 21, "Down to Fundamentals." Inasmuch as I have known The Post for more than 30 years and in the light of present economic conditions, I think the editorial is much too soft. You are too polite in your criticism of this "bundle of guesses" charged with nonsense called a Democratic Administration. I have been a Democrat 85 years, and there has never been anything like what we have now. I am not surprised that the delegation from Lexington, Mass., where our struggle for American liberty began, should come to our National Capital with a protest to Congress against such conditions. I am a Southern man, and my father went with Gen. Robert E. Lee all the way in the Civil War from beginning to end. I know Southern people as well as any man in the world and I am not surprised that the Southern Industrial Council of Birmingham, Ala., should now compare the effects of governmental policies with Sherman's march to the sea.

I should like to have Joe T. Robinson, the able Senator from Arkansas, define Jeffersonian Democracy in the light of this Administration. This Administration is no more akin to Grover Cleveland's Administration than a skunk is to a lamb, as far as I can see, and I am older in Democratic voting than any Democrat in either house of Congress. If Democracy is not a thing of the past, I am unable to see any. Oh, how we need a Lincoln or a Theodore Roosevelt in the White House.

I may be in heaven before this letter is in print, and I weigh my words. I seriously fear that if this policy is not changed we shall have a revolution before 1936, such as the world has never known. Not since Caesar's day when he was emperor of Rome when his decree went forth "that all the world should be taxed," has the world seen such conditions as we have now. Put more and longer teeth in your editorials. If our country is ever redeemed from chaos, it will have to be done by the Republican party. No hope in Democracy now.

Collared!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Unless a wheel squeaks, it will receive no notice or attention. But the farmer and the mechanic and others who work with their hands are provided for through Government aid, because if they aren't it means a strike, or a milk war. In all public utilities the public is considered first, hence it is that the class mentioned above are granted their demands for the sake of harmony and peace. But the poor white-collared men, for poor he is, and collared by loss of position, he must struggle along without any sympathy or help from anyone, and borrowing on his life insurance, to keep his own family alive. The white-collar man is the clerk, or man who has depended upon a bank, insurance company, or upon clerical work, who has suffered first by a merger, brought about to reduce expenses and leaving a surplus of individuals to shift for themselves. It makes no difference whether mergers are right or wrong, but it does concern thousands of men and women, young and old, when these mergers take place under a plea for economy, which is the capitalists' way of concentrating wealth. I am one of those who has suffered this method, which has been the means of adding to our unemployment situation in the entire United States.

Solution for Unemployment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the working people of America would read the Sunday financial columns of the newspapers, they would find that the majority of the industries listed on the New York Stock Market are still working in the red.

It is to the interest of the working people to protect the industries and railroads from bankruptcy, as their own income depends upon their recuperation and success. It is said one out of three families own stock. Therefore, it is also to the interest of the stockholders that the industries and railroads be given a chance to recover. If the large industries are losing from $5 to $7 a share, many of the smaller industries will be driven out of existence by the excess demands of the striking workmen.

Company unions should enable employers and employes to get together and solve their identical problems for the preservation of industry. It is said we have 9,000,000 unemployed. If 1,000,000 firms would each employ 9 more workers, they would stop unemployment, and cut down taxes, by removing this gigantic drain of the unemployed on the finances of the Government, and keep the cities from bankruptcy by enabling all workers to pay their rents and property owners to pay their taxes.

Securities Act Revision.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You may be interested in the official action of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce regarding securities act revision. The Ohio Chamber of Commerce is the largest business organization in this State, embracing in its membership all lines of business, including agriculture.

The Ohio Chamber of Commerce, through its Federal affairs committee, carefully studied the securities act of 1933. The committee made its recommendation to the board of directors of the Ohio chamber and the following official declaration was made: "That the chamber recommends amendment of the securities act so that directors and officers of issuing companies and underwriters and dealers should be held liable only for fraud or willful misrepresentation."

As Others See It

Artemus Ward

You young people of today who think Will Rogers and Joe Penner and Eddie Cantor and their associates are funny, how sorry we elderly folk are for you. For when we were young, there were kicking around the house "Artemus Ward, His Book," and "Swingin' 'Round the Cirkle," and "Josh Billing's Complete Works"—which we thought were tremendously funny, and still do—and still do.

A hundred years ago today, a boy was born to the Brownes of Waterford, Me., and christened Charles Farrar. He went to work in his early 'teens on the Skowhegan Chronicle, and the name of the town must have made a deep impression on him, for before he was 20 he had become Artemus Ward, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, proprietor of an imaginary show, whose adventures he chronicled from week to week:

"My female friends," sed I, "be4 you leeve, I've a few remarks to remark; wa them well. The female woman is one of the greatest institooshuns of which this land can boste. Had there bin no female wimin in the world, I should scarcely be here with my unparalled show on this very occashun. She is good in sickness, good in wellness, good all the time. O woman, woman!" I cried, my feelins worked up to high poetic pitch, "you air an angel when you behave yourself; but when you take off your proper appairel & (mettyforically speaken) get into pantyloons—when you desert your firesides, & with your heds full of wimin's rites go round like roarin lions, seeking whom you may revour somebody—in short, when you undertake to play the man, you play the devil and air an emfatic noosance. My female friends," I continnered, as they were indignantly departin, "wa well what A. Ward has sed."

You get the idea? Well, maybe it isn't as funny as it seemed to us when we were boys; but it still has a flavor. The works of Josh Billings (Henry Wheeler Shaw) and Petroleum Vesuvius Nasby (David Ross Locke) were just as badly spelled, and to us equally humorous. Perhaps that triumvirate caught their insane cacography from Hosea and Ezekiel Biglow; it seems silly to winners of spelling bees, but to us it was delightful.

Artemus Ward died in 1867, aged 33; deathless in memory, because he made Abraham Lincoln laugh amidst the miseries of the Civil War. Josh Billings, 16 years his senior, outlived him 18 years; Nasby, one year older than Artemus, died three years after Billings. Mark Twain followed them with a new style of humor; and now we live in a wise-cracking era from which we elders sometimes sneak back with relief to those dog-eared, broken-backed volumes which take us to the days when good Republicans cursed Grover Cleveland every morning and the country was happy.

The Post Impressionist

Pharaoh's Kine

Postoffice, Tuesday.

WE hope that Judge Isaac R. Hitt will not hold us in contempt of court for what we are about to write. We speak solely in sorrow. Nevertheless, if His Honor decides to summon us, we shall appear before him with our head unbowed. There are times when duty supersedes inclination.

The action of which we have to complain had its scene at Judge Hitt's tribunal. The date was the other day. The prisoner at the bar of justice had been arraigned on the charge of intoxication. He proffered the amazing plea that Washington beer alone was responsible for the charge. He said he drank it to regain lost weight. And he was dismissed with a suspended sentence.

Here and now, we shall refrain from inquiry into the tempting problem raised by that allegation against local beers. What moves us is the obvious inference that the court's heart was touched because the prisoner was thin. We feel that had he been a fat man drinking gin to reduce, he would not have received the same quality of mercy. He would have been laughed at—and jailed.

If we are wrong in our assumption, we apologize. But we do not believe that we are wrong. We believe this incident is just another glaring example of the popular prejudice against Corpulence and another triumph for the ever-favored Thin.

What lies at the bottom of such discriminations? This: That most people are unhappy; that, believing leanness a symptom of extreme unhappiness, they sympathize therewith; but that, believing the fat man necessarily a happy man, they envy and hate him.

"If to be fat is to be hated,
Then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved.

A cruel superstition assumes some sure link between fat and fun. "Laugh and grow fat," says the lying proverb. It were more correct to caution: "Laugh and grow a figure of fun"—of scornful fun.

The theory is that fat men feel as funny as they look; the fact is that, in a nation of humorists, Christopher Morley, Irving Cobb and Alexander Woollcott are almost the only ones weighing above 180 pounds.

The theory is that fat men aren't nervous; the fact is that iron nerves—which are imperfect nerves—wire only iron bodies. The theory is that fat men are insensible to worry; any doctor will tell you that worry is a fat-maker and that, since Depression began, the net weight of the depressed has risen by hundreds of tons. Prejudice thinks thin men poor eaters when they can get food; prejudice believes that, generally, they are thin because they can't—dietary truth knows that the fat man is usually fat not because he eats much, but because he digests little.

Time was when fat men were properly respected. The law did not love obesity-mockers in the dominions of Alfonzo the Fat of Portugal, the France of Charles le Gros or Louis le Gros. As late as the Eighteenth Century, bonnets were doffed to Edward Bright, of Essex, who weighed 616 pounds, to Dan Lambert, of Leicester, who achieved 739. But today's concave lad considers fat a secretion of stupidity; the "normal" girl, abnormally incapacious, considers amplitude unromantic.

Were fat Samuel Johnson and Edward Gibbon "fat-heads?"

Unromantic?

What more romantic than the lieder of stout Brahms? Whose were the romantic voices of yesterday but amazonian Nordica's, whacking Schumann-Heink's, huge and incomparable Carusos'?

Fat—and the girls laugh at you!
Thin—and they'll telephone!
Why, the world's all wet
On its values yet,
With the Romeos skin-and-bone!

Most of the infamous wife-killers and wife-swindlers have been lean and hungry Cassiuses. Eros was skinny, but Cupid plump. And what of one of the world's very greatest, or at least most frequent, husbands? We refer to Tudor Henry, the eighth of England.

There is, indeed, herein a warning of political import. Fiction, which even in its most romantic postures seeks to convey a conviction of life, furnishes few stout villains beyond Wilkie Collins' Count Fosco and that enormous strategist of the wheeled-chair whom Gouverneur Morris gave us with "The Voice in the Rice." Throughout all history, large men have never thought rebelliously.

On the one hand, Wolsey was weighty and, at least for most of his career, malleable. The Zulu nation owed its greatness to Chaka, a chieftain of mountainous proportions. Allowing for a few Mendelian exceptions, the stouter the Senator the less concern he gives a White House.

On the other hand, the most dangerous rebels are those who turn against their leaders, because rebellion has not been carried far enough. Robespierre was a case in point. So, as Lenin discovered, was Trotsky. Well, such rebellious rebels have always been meager men—and the increase of leanness in Congress gives the political philosopher pause.

Except for jovial John Dickinson, who is really above the brain-trust battle, all the New Dealers of our acquaintance are—of course, only physically—light-weights.

"Let me," said wise Shakespeare's wise Roman—"have men about me that are fat."

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

IT seems very strange to me that the discussion about recovery, the degree already attained and the progress still being made, goes right along notwithstanding that Senator Bailey, of North Carolina, has sounded the death knell of it. I suppose it is because the Senator was not generally heard, though I have never heard a statement made with more solemnity or with quite the definiteness, or maybe it is because of the hardiness of our race. Whatever the reason, the fact is that the discussion continues as if the Senator had not opened his mouth.

BARGERON.

Only yesterday the representative of some association told the Senate Finance Committee considering the bill to give the President authority to negotiate reciprocal tariff treaties, that he thought it would retard recovery. Why, in view of the North Carolinian's utterance, this should be a factor in the consideration of the bill I can't see.

• • • •

Insofar as I am concerned no matter affecting recovery one way or the other has been of the slightest interest to me after the Senator's benediction. It was that—and spoken as gravely as ever man dare to speak. It should become generally known, I think, so the people can set about some other pursuit. There is no good in seeking something that is utterly futile. Instead, it is what our planners would call a rank economic waste.

It was on the occasion of the vote in the Senate to override Mr. Roosevelt on the veterans and Government employes' bill. Nothing about recovery was on the agenda or even under discussion. Apparently the thought came to the Senator out of a clear sky. It did not really do so because an utterance so weighty and momentous had to be given considerable study. Heavy thoughts of this kind do not come to men in an instant. They are rather the product of much mental ponderousness.

• • • •

It did look as though the Senator had suddenly got his thought, however. He was explaining or seeking to explain why he could not vote to override the President's veto notwithstanding that he had voted for the bill originally. Not much attention was being paid by his fellow Senators or by the galleries. The rather general impression was, indeed, that he was talking until the Democratic leaders could bring some more recalitrant brothers into line.

Suddenly he stepped briskly from his place in the second row and walked to the well of the chamber, pounding his fist and his voice rising as he moved.

"I can't vote to override this veto," he exclaimed in effect, "because there will be no recovery in this country until we balance the budget!"

Now it takes a persistent people to continue looking for recovery in the face of such a statement as that. To say definitely that recovery will not come until the budget is balanced, to my mind, to put it definitely out of the reach of living men.

There were men in the Hoover administration who said we could not have recovery until the budget was balanced and the same threat has been heard in this regime. But it had come to be lost in the din. Most of us had forgotten about it, as a discarded, out-moded recovery premise.

For the North Carolina Senator to bring it out of the moth balls seemed to me to be right cruel. But if it is a fact we ought to know it. Then we can know what to expect.

It may be taken as significant in this connection that the New Dealers talk little if any about recovery. What they promise is a "more abundant life" and a "realm of cooperative plenty." I'll bet that that's their trick to get around Senator Bailey's proscription of recovery without a blanaced budget.

Southern Lumber Mills Given Price Advantage

Additional selling price advantages have been granted to small Southern pine mills in a decision by a special board of review of the NRA lumber code authority, following public hearings last week in Atlanta, Ga.; Shreveport, La., and Jackson, Miss., the Associated Press reported.

Under the ruling, mills producing less than 1,000,000 board feet per month will be permitted to sell timbers, joists, planking and all railroad and car material at 7½ per cent lower price than mills producing more than 1,000,000 feet. These items previously were exempted from any price differentials.

1,111,160 Farmers Sign To Cut Corn-Hog Output

Approximately 1,111,160 farmers have signed contracts to reduce corn and hog production this year, the AAA reported yesterday. Total payment will approximate $365,000,000, it was estimated.

The production campaign has closed in all leading corn-hog States and will be terminated shortly in virtually all others, officials said.

Fredericksburg Bridge Bids Opened May 17

Fredericksburg, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Bids on a small bridge and approaches on Dixon street will be opened by the State highway department on May 17.

Life Saver

Flying Corks of Catsup Warn Grocer of Fire.

Charleston, W. Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Clyde Morris, grocer, says a shelf of catsup bottles saved his life.

Awakened in the night by a persistent hammering on the floor beneath his bed, Morris hastened downstairs into his grocery and found it on fire. The blaze was put out, but much damage was done.

Heat had caused tops of catsup bottles to pop off and strike the ceiling, giving a warning that probably saved Morris from death.

Tariff Project Is Attacked as Recovery Bar

Enemies Assail Measure as Stimson Publicly Urges Passage.

Opponents of the bill designed to grant President Roosevelt power to negotiate reciprocal tariff agreements attacked the measure yesterday as one that would retard industrial development of the United States.

Administration members of the Senate Finance Committee resumed hearings on the bill, heartened by the fact that Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State in the Hoover Cabinet, had emerged as the first Conservative Republican to indorse a New Deal project.

Democratic leaders in the Senate said they had no forewarning that Stimson was going to urge passage of the measure giving the President power to raise or lower tariff rates 50 per cent.

Senate Majority Leader Joe T. Robinson summoned his Democratic colleagues into conference last night to outline plans for the floor fight in behalf of the tariff bill. The measure already has passed the House.

Harry L. Derby, representing the Manufacturing Chemists Association, told the Senate Finance Committee the tariff bill would hamper economic recovery.

"No industry would be safe in any expansion program unless it knew it would be protected," he said. "I don't believe it would be a practical thing to change tariff rates to any great extent without having a day in court for industry, agriculture, mining and labor."

He suggested an amendment giving Congress power to ratify or reject any tariff changes made by the President. Derby said the tariff bill would act in the same way as the securities law, which, he said, had slowed business recovery. Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, said the attack on the securities law was unwarranted because no one had proved it was hampering recovery.

Robert Graham, vice president of Graham Brothers Motor Corp., supported the bill in behalf of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

"One of the chief causes of our economic trouble," he said, "not only here, but in foreign countries, has been the high tariffs which have placed a great list of major products beyond the reach of the many."

The Administration has indicated it is unwilling to accept any changes in the tariff bill. Many Senators now in doubt about their votes are believed to be willing to support the measure if an amendment is attached giving business firms a hearing before tariff changes are made.

Stimson's indorsement of the bill was made in a speech under auspices of the intercollegiate council of international cooperation.

"A general revision of tariff laws by Congress," he said, "would be entirely ineffective to meet the situation which exists today. It would be far too slow. It could not reach the many different specific problems arising and constantly changing in a great many different nations."

Home Owners' Rider Effects Five Benefits

Principal of Bonds, as Well as Interest, Guaranteed by Government.

Five concrete benefits accruing to home owners, employers and employes in the building trades and bondholders, as a result of the amendment to the home owners' loan act, were outlined yesterday by John H. Fahey, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

"We anticipate speedier relief for distressed home owners, increased credit for new home building and repair, wider employment in the building trades and strong Federal protection for private savings," Fahey said.

"Five major objectives and several minor ones are accomplished by this new legislation.

"First, the United States Government now guarantees both principal and interest of the bonds of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, previously guaranteed only as to interest.

"A second important provision rigidly restricts loans by the corporation to home owners who were in involuntary default on June 13, 1933, or whose default at a later date has been due to circumstances beyond their control. Only in exceptional cases will loans be made to applicants whose default has occurred since then.

"A third feature, which may provide employment for the equivalent of 125,000 men for a year or more, is the authorization of $200,000,000 to be advanced by the Home Owners Loan Corporation from its own funds for reconditioning homes. This fund is strictly limited to homes on which the corporation makes relief loans.

"The fourth important change effected permits the Treasury to buy full-paid income shares in any Federal savings and loan association.

"Fifth, the optional moratorium for borrowers from the Home Owners Loan Corporation is withdrawn. No postponement of principal payments will now be permitted except in necessitous cases."

When Scales Balance, High One Always Comes Down

By Robert Quillen

In the country's greatest metropolis there lived a good bachelor who found pleasure in being a combination Santa Claus and uplifter.

He was rich and romantic as well as good, and his heart filled with pity when he thought of the many lonely maidens in the land who longed in vain for a prince charming like him. He would have married them all right gladly, just to see them made happy.

His ambition, however, was to find and marry some neglected and unhappy maid, preferably beautiful, who never had owned so much as a pair of silk stockings.

The less she knew of luxury, the more she would appreciate his generosity; and thus he could play the role of Santa Claus daily, delighting her with an endless succession of gifts, and her exclamations of rapture and gratitude would give him endless pleasure.

As it turned out, Fate brought him even more than he had hoped to find.

He met the poor and neglected girl, and life had treated her so shabbily that she wept with joy when he gave her a string of beads from the ten-cent store.

But that was not all. Her environment had made her tough. She could outswear the proverbial sailor and she consumed quantities of moonshine liquor.

Here, then, was an opportunity not only to play Santa Claus but to play the uplifter as well.

The good bachelor decided to marry and reform her. While making her happy with gifts he would also set her a good example and train her in ways of righteousness. It would be easy to do, for he never had tasted tobacco or cussed or touched liquor, and it was reasonable to suppose that gratitude would prompt her to accept him as a model.

So they were married and human nature took its course.

Some years later an old friend stopped to visit the happy pair. The bride was dressed in an imported gown and bedecked with diamonds and roped with pearls. Also she was drunk.

"Where," asked the friend, "is your good and generous husband?"

"I sent him for some liquor," said the bride, "but he's probably too drunk to get back with it."

Credit to Cuba Of $4,000,000 Granted by U.S.

Island to Buy Silver and Mint 10,000,000 Standard Pesos.

Moving to give practical effect to the promised new deal for Cuba, the Administration, through the Second Export-Import Bank, announced extension yesterday of a $4,000,000 credit for Cuba for the purchase of silver.

Secured by the credit and good faith of the Cuban government, and of a short term character, the advance already been practically used up in the purchase of 7,500,000 ounces of silver for $3,588,568.83. The Treasury negotiated the purchase.

The bullion is estimated to suffice for the minting of 10,000,000 standard Cuban pesos, worth a dollar each. Minting will take place here at the rate of 500,000 pesos a week.

Consequently, when the first installment of the credit falls due there will still be an ample securing residue of bullion silver on hand here to serve as collateral, it was pointed out. This is to supplement the credit and good faith already on file.

Purpose of the advance is to permit the Cuban government to pay back salaries to exasperated employes. Part of the money will also be used for launching a public works program to relieve unemployment and to carrying out various long contemplated agricultural reforms, it is believed here.

By using silver, the Cuban government can pay off 100 pesos (or dollars) worth of local obligations for every $40 of debt incurred here.

Hope was expressed in official circles that the easing of Cuba's financial strain with 10,000,000 shiny new pesos would result in improvement of trade conditions between the two countries.

May Day.

No one knows for certain the origin of the name May; though it is usually said to come from Maia, the mother of the god Mercury; for the Romans used to make sacrifices to her on the first day of this month. From April 28 to May 2 feasts were held in honor of Flora, the goddess of flowers. The Romans thought the month—gay in many respects—was unlucky for marriages, and this ridiculous superstition still frightens some timid souls.

In medieval, Chaucerian, and Elizabethan England, May Day was one of the most joyous holidays of the year. All kinds of persons got up before dawn, and went to the woods, bringing back branches and flowers. They all went a-Maying. "Oh, that we two were Maying," as the song says. There was general frivolity, laughter, and love-making, and every one danced around the Maypole. The Puritans did not like these Mayploes, calling them "stinking idols," and regarding them as a wicked survival of Paganism. But in 1661, when Charles II came back, people celebrated by erecting in London, at the place of the Church of St. Mary's-in-the-Strand, a Maypole 134 feet high, where it stood till 1717, when it was carried into the country and used by Sir Isaac Newton to support a telescope.

Chaucer, who died in 1400, loved the month of May and the celebrations in honor of May Day.

Er it were day, as was hir wone to do,
She was arisen, and al redy dight;
For May wol have no slogardye anight.
The sesoun priketh every gentil herte,
And maketh him out of his sleep to sterte,
And seith, "arys, and do thyn observaunce."

Again,

The bisy larke, messager of daye,
Salueth in hir song the morwe graye;
And fyry Phebus ryseth up so brighte,
That al the orient laugheth of the lighte,
The silver dropes, having on the leves.

Remember that Artemas Ward said that Chaucer was a good poet but a mighty poor speller.

Chaucer's poetry is like the merry month of May, in his love of sunshine, singing, birds, flowers, and everything cheerful.

One of the features of the festival was the selection of the Queen of the May; and the most popular poem on this subject was published 100 years ago by Tennyson, "The May Queen." This indeed became so popular that it not only has been parodied thousands of times, but has given rise to the perennial alcoholic joke. Although this joke has now been going strong for a whole century, it is still sure fire. It appeared in the Saturday Evening Post a few years ago; the testimony being that the officer at the garrison was not drunk, because he ordered them to call him early, for he was to be Queen of the May. In a sophisticated comedy now running in New York, called "No More Ladies," the one remark which gets the biggest laugh is when the middle-aged lady insists that she went to bed perfectly sober, and in order to prove it, asks the butler what her last words were on retiring. The grave butler states that she requested him to call her early, as she was to be Queen of the May. One hundred years from now, it will still be popular, and I recommend it to all writers and after-dinner speakers.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

ANYONE in Richmond knows who "Justice John" was. Around the figure of John Jeter Crutchfield, crotchety and kindly old judge who presided over the police court there for 32 years and died in 1920, a host of stories have gathered.

John H. Gwathmey, author of "Legends of Virginia," last year's best-selling item of Virginiana, has made a rambling and delightful volume of those stories—"Justice John: Tales From the Courtroom of the Virginia Judge" (Dietz Press, Richmond, $2.50). Put in the form of nine sessions in court, these anecdotes catch the eccentricity and quiet humor of a man beloved by negroes and white alike. One sample will have to do.

THEO. HALL.

"A white man was before the court on the charge of having fired a pistol in the streets. The accused swore, and as a matter of fact proved, that he had fired straight up in the air.

"'I don't see,' said the prisoner, 'why I should be punished for harmlessly firing in the air.'"

"'You might have hit an angel,' drawled Justice John."

Clara E. Laughlin, who made "So You're Going to——" a trade-mark of the first rank, writes a brisk and sensible autobiography—"Traveling Through Life" (Houghton Mifflin, $3)—which I enjoyed hugely. It's as full of names and anecdotes as was Jessie B. Rittenhouse's, and there's the same determination to write and travel and know everybody, but the result is far more enlivening.

One of the best of the yarns was that told her by George William Curtis, even though already sub-literary history. It seems that in the heyday of Concord, Mass., Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau, Bronson Alcott and Curtis decided to have a club. One Monday night they met in Emerson's study, but "no one could think of anything sufficiently Olympian to say." Finally Hawthorne, willing to lead off with a simple topic, asked Emerson: "Do you get a lot of letters asking for your autograph?"

"I do indeed," replied Emerson.

"What do you do with them?"

"Throw them in the wastebasket."

"But they inclose stamps," Hawthorne objected.

"Of course," said the author of "The Over-Soul;" "that's where I get all my postage."

Several recent biographies are worth your attention. Charles Morrow Wilson, a young native of Fayettesville, Ark. (where Charles J. Finger lives), has written the first specific work on that youthful secretary of Thomas Jefferson who led an expedition into the Louisiana Territory—"Meriwether Lewis, of Lewis and Clark" (Crowell, $3). Lewis was afterward made governor of the Territory; at 35 he died mysteriously in a Tennessee cabin. Of his little-known life, Mr. Wilson has made a careful, detailed and very readable story.

Morris Hillquit, for 40 years one of the most active of American Socialists, recounts his strenuous career in "Loose Leaves From a Busy Life" (MacMillan, $2.50). Here are the convictions of a sincere and brave man, and the inside story of a movement which has had some ironic results.

• • • •

One more book on Queen Victoria appears, this one by Sir John A. R. Marriott, former Oxford lecturer and M. P. from York. Entitled "Queen Victoria and Her Ministers" (Dutton, $3.50), it seeks to show how constitutional monarchy worked out in perhaps its best and most conspicuous example. Serious, but by no means dull.

• • • •

Last is a rather hysterically written little book by Harman Black called "A Queen After Death" (Real Book Co., $2), which tells of the passionate love between fourteenth century Prince Pedro, of Portugal, and Inez de Castro, cousin of Princess Costanza, of Castile. Highly romantic, even though thoroughly documented. The climax comes at the famous incident of Pedro's ordering that the corpse of his beloved, dressed in regal garments, should be seated beside him on the throne to receive the homage of the nobles. The perfectly true extravagance of the story is all on that scale.

Alice Davis, Mr. Makins Are Married

British Diplomat Weds Daughter of Former War Secretary.

Troth of Miss Corcoran and Dr. Childs Told in New York.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The wedding of Miss Alice Brooks Davis, daughter of the former Secretary of War, Mr. Dwight F. Davis, and the late Mrs. Davis, to Mr. Roger M. Makins, Second Secretary of the British Embassy, took place yesterday at noon in St. John's Episcopal Church at Tallahassee, Fla., near the bride's father's estate Meridan Plantation.

The arrangements for the wedding were charming in their simplicity. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Jeffery Alfriend in the presence of a small company of relatives and close friends.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and wore a gown of ivory satin fashioned on princess lines with long, fitted sleeves, and a long circular train. The veil of tulle fell in voluminous folds over the satin train, and the bride carried a shower bouquet of white flowers.

Miss Cynthia Davis and Miss Helen Davis, sisters of the bride, who were the bridesmaids, wore frocks of pale green chiffon and carried pastel-colored flowers.

Mr. Richard Heathcote-Armory, of London, was best man.

To Reside in Norway.

A reception at Meridian Plantation followed the ceremony, after which the couple left for a brief wedding trip. They will sail about May 12 for England, and later will go to Mr. Makins' new post as Second Secretary of the British Legation in Oslo, Norway.

Mrs. Makins is the eldest of the three daughters of Mr. Davis, and made her debut in the Capital when her father was Secretary of War during the Coolidge regime. Later she accompanied Mr. Davis to Manila, where she acted as his official hostess while he served as Governor General of the Philippines.

Miss Helen Davis, a younger sister, was presented to society last winter at a reception given by her father at the Sulgrave Club, and was also entertained at a series of small dances in their home in Georgetown.

Mr. Makins is the eldest son of Brig. Gen. Ernest Makins, C. B., D. S. O., M. P., and Mrs. Makins, of 180 Queens Gate, London. Gen. Makins, who came to this country to attend the wedding, has been a member of the House of Commons for the Knutsford Division of Cheshire since 1922. Young Mr. Makins was educated at Winchester College and Christ Church, Oxford; was elected a fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, in 1925, and called to the bar by the Inner Temple in 1927. He entered the foreign office in 1928, and has been attached to the Embassy in Washington for more than a year.

Lucinda Corcoran Engaged.

The engagement of Miss Lucinda Eustis Corcoran and Dr. Edward Patterson Childs, both of New York, has been announced by Miss Corcoran's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Eustis Corcoran, of New York.

Miss Corcoran was born at Eustis Lodge, Newport, R. I., in 1915, and made her debut in New York at a small reception given for her by her parents in 1932. Before that time she attended Miss Chapin's and Miss Hewitt's schools in New York.

Her brother, Mr. William Eustis Corcoran, was married to Miss Gertrude Stadelman, of Akron, Ohio, in June, 1932.

Her great grandfather, the late W. W. Corcoran, financier and philanthropist, founded and endowed the Louise Home and the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington. The Eustis family connections had a distinguished ancestry, and include a Colonial Governor of the State of Massachusetts, members of the bar, the Diplomatic Service and the Houses of Congress.

Her father was a nephew of the late Miss Celestine Eustis and a brother of the late William Corcoran Eustis and the late Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock.

Wedding in August.

Her mother, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William A. Street, of New York, is a sister of Mr. Arthur F. Street, Miss Susan Watts Street and the late Mrs. Herbert Pell Townsend. She is related to the Kearny, Morgan and Pell families and cousin of Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis and Mrs. Helen Morton, daughters of the late Levi P. Morton, Vice President of the United States under Benjamin Harrison and later Governor of the State of New York.

Dr. Childs, son of Mrs. Harris Robbins Childs, of 129 East Eighty-second street, New York, and the late Mr. Childs, is a grandson of the late Edward Patterson, chief justice of the Appellate Court of the State of New York, and has many distinguished family connections in New York, New England and Philadelphia. He attended Groton School and was graduated from Harvard University and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University.

The wedding will take place in August.

Roosevelt, with several of her friends will model the costumes in the Fashion Show to be given at the Walter Reed Hospital May 8 by the Gray Ladies of the Volunteer Service of the Red Cross in celebration of the sixteenth year of their service and as a benefit for the Memorial Chapel fund.

The full amount necessary for the building of the chapel was pledged before the ground was broken, but because of the depression some of the most generous contributors have been unable to meet their pledges. The result is that a small deficit remains.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 30 (AP). Wine-flavored lipsticks have come in for condemnation from members of the Park Place W. C. T. U., who instructed their secretary to write a letter of protest to the manufacturer advertising them.

"We should be thoroughly disgusted and much concerned about this," Mrs. Philip Sweet said at yesterday's meeting, "because young high school girls are the ones who will buy these lipsticks."

Representative Kahn Recalls Rigid Social Code of 90's, Lauds Gain of Informality

Radio Audience Hears Reminiscenses of Prewar Years in Capital Affairs—Revision of Stock Exchange Bill Advocated.

The magic of radio brings women of America closer to feminine personalities in the Nation's official limelight through The Washington Post's intimate interview series—"First Ladies of the Capital"

Over WRC on Mondays and WMAL on Fridays come the voices of women who magnetize attention of the Nation with the part they play in Government.

Today's story of Representative Kahn's broadcast is the eighth in a series of informal stories by The Post's radio reporter.

By Margaret Santry.

SHADES OF CAPITAL LADIES riding down Embassy Row bedecked in the frills and furbelows of the Mauve Decade stalked in The Washington Post's "First Ladies of the Capital" broadcast over WRC yesterday.

Genial Representative Florence Kahn, the court jester of the House, recalled the scenes of social Washington when an opn barouche provided the sole means of transportation for official ladies to fulfill the demands of social etiquette.

She spoke before a coast-to-coast audience over a National Broadcasting Co. network at 11:15 a. m. as a seasoned observer of Washington social and political life who has known eight First Ladies since joining the official circle.

Expressing her thanfulness that the modern tendency in social procedure has been toward informality, Mrs. Kahn described the strenuous routine of social duties once incumbent upon and religiously followed by every official lady.

Mrs. Kahn: "Making our official calls in the days when I first came to Washington was much more of a task than it is now. I remember three or four other wives of Congressmen and myself would hire a carriage together, and start out at the ungodly hour of 2 o'clock to begin our calls. It was difficult at first to get used to the official etiquette that required the newcomer to call upon the old resident first, but it had to be done, so we'd religiously call on and display our charms to the wives of all the officialswho outranked our husbands in position and length of service. The success of our day depended upon the number of calls we could manage to make."

Talks on Social Duties.

She described for women over the country the various social duties incumbent upon Congressional wives, and the number of official White House functions Congressional society attends each session.

Returning from the White House to Capitol Hill in her dissertation, Mrs. Kahn remarked the increase in the volume of mail received in this Administration as against other sessions she has served.

Mrs. Kahn: It isn't surprising when we consider how close the Government is coming to everything in our lives and homes.

"While each year the type of correspondence varies with the legislation being considered by Congress, no legislation in a long time has roused the general public's interest as has the Stock Exchange bill now pending in the House. Over 4,000 letters on this subject have been received alone. The letters indicate the bill in its present form is not popular.

Hopes for Revision.

Miss Santry: "And how in your opinion could the Stock Exchange bill be changed to best serve the interests of both the investor and the financial houses?"

Mrs. Kahn: "I hope the bill will be revised to provide a more elastic form of regulation than it now contains, and also that some amendments will be made to the securities act to release some of the frozen capital of the country. There is plenty of money in this country. The banks are bulging with it. But they're afraid to let it go."

Miss Santry: "Then it's true the securities act which is now exercising such strict supervision over the issuing of new securities is keeping these assets in the country frozen?"

Mrs. Kahn: "Yes. In its present form the securities act is hampering the issuance of new securities so that men in business are afraid to take a chance to expand."

Miss Santry: "And this completes the vicious cycle, I suppose, in that if business can't expand more people can not be put to work?"

Mrs. Kahn: "Exactly. We hear so much talk about industry absorbing unemployment, but how can industry absorb unemployment if it can not expand and how can industry expand without capital. Even though industry shortens hours it can not take up the slack. But if industry could expand and were encouraged to expand instead of being restrained—and by expansion I mean legitimate, regulated expansion—it could readily absorb a great part of unemployment.

Faces Campaign.

Revealing she is returning to San Francisco at the close of this session to face a new campaign for reelection, Mrs. Kahn admitted she expected some opposition, but hoped to win. To our avowal that her constituents should consider the pall that would settle upon the House without the popular Kahn sense of humor, Mrs. Kahn said:

"I've never gotten over my surprise at being called the wit of the House. I like to joke and jolly a bit and I have found it helps me over a lot of rough places. I believe in joshing, it jogs people out of grouchiness—and that's a help in politics. I inherited my sense of humor from my mother, who is eighty-eight years young—and just as spry and active as ever."

Tune in Friday at 2 p. m. over WMAL on another "First Lady" in The Post's series. Read the story the following day on the Woman's Page.

THE MODERN TREND in social procedure is toward informality, Representative Florence Kahn, above, is happy to report. She remembers a time when the success of her day depended upon the number of social calls she could make in an open carriage.

Apple-Growing Sisters Find Adventure, Success

It's an Uncrowded Profession and One With Few Women; It's Lots of Work and Little Play But They Love It and Think There's a Big Future.

By Marion Butler.

IN BLAZING the "trail of the pink petals" across West Virginia mountain tops, two women pioneers of today have found adventure and success.

They are sisters, Miss Imogene Thomson and Mrs. Washington Berry Grove, of Summits Point, Jefferson County, W. Va. For 15 years they have been opening a new path for members of their sex in the field of large-scale apple growing.

Working long hours they personally supervise and manage their 700-acre farm on Summits Point.

An all-season job, winter finds them at the hard grind of pruning; spring, operating the huge spraying machines; and autumn, in the midst of the whirl of picking and packing, bossing crews of half a hundred men and women workers.

"Lots of work and little play," these sisters smile, "but well worth it. For the woman who wants the spice of adventure with success, we honestly believe today there is no more promising field than commercial apple growing on a large scale."

"As one of the few uncrowded occupations left to modern women," Miss Imogen Thomson points out, "the business holds a big future for those who are willing to work and study for it.

"Competition is keen but invigorating. Though our competitors are men, we have found their courtesy unfailing and the zest of the rivalry good."

Both Miss Thomson and Mrs. Grove agree no bigger thrill of achievement can be attained than that derived at this season of the year watching seas of pink blossoms unfold.

As daughters of Jefferson County's pioneer apple grower, Dr. A. P. Thomson, the first man to start this profession commercially in the county, Miss Thomson and Mrs. Grove can be said to inherit a special propensity for the business. And their grandfather, more than half a century ago, planted one of the first apple orchards in the State around Hawthorne, the same 200-year-old home in which Miss Thomson and Mrs. Grove live today.

Built in the days when Jefferson County was young, Hawthorne preserves its quota of memories. It was here John Brown, in the guise of a clock mender, stayed one night to stir up the slaves. Later, when he was tried at Charles Town, an aunt of Mrs. Grove and Miss Thomson, Miss Lucy Thomson, was called to court to identify him.

Under a huge red oak still standing in the garden, which once saw use as a tobacco press in the days before the Civil War, Sheridan's commanding officers camped while their men slept on the surrounding fields where hundreds of acres of apple trees now bloom.

APPLE GROWING has its esthetic as well as its practical value. Miss Imogen Thompson, above, who, with her sister, manages a vast apple orchard acreage in West Virginia, sees a promise of beautiful bud and rich fruition in the branch she's examining here.

Rural and City Women Called More Friendly

Understanding Will Continue to Grow Stronger, Hopes Mrs. Yost.

THE gap between the farm and city woman is constantly narrowing. For today all women realize they are interdependent—and have mutual problems and interests.

That is the opinion of Mrs. Ellis A. Yost, vice president of the National Capital Division of the Woman's Farm and Garden Association. This section held its first annual meeting at the Dodge Hotel yesterday, preceding the National convention, which meets today. Mrs. Yost expressed the hope the friendliness and understanding between farm and city women would continue to grow.

"The pioneer farm woman," she said, "was doctor, teacher, nurse, baker, tailor—everything in her home. She worked from four in the morning until late at night. And she had time for nothing but work. Her day is past. Her successor is a woman who has time for clubs, for beautifying her home, for participation in civic matters. She has taken university extension courses in home economics, and she is just as up to date as her city sister."

There are certain basic interests that bind all women together, Mrs. Yost believes.

"One of these is food," she said. "All women are interested in food—they have to be. That is why both farm and city women want to raise standards of markets. The farm women learn what the city woman wants in her markets and supplies it. As a result the city woman buys from her."

Another project sponsored by the association, is beautifying roadsides and byways.

"If there is one thing all women are interested in, it is beauty," Mrs. Yost said, "and through trying to beautify our countryside, farm and city women have found another link to bind them together."

Mrs. Yost expressed her admiration for the country woman who, she believes largely determines the character and integrity of the Nation's citizens.

Mrs. Roosevelt Hears Problem Of Older Women

Workers Over 25 Taking Depression's Rap, Says Relief Director.

MRS. ROOSEVELT, who at 49 is noted for her many activities, was told yesterday of the problem of women workers being denied places in industry after reaching the age of 35.

The problem was discussed by Mrs. Mary M. Moon, director of women's relief work in Illinois, at a White House conference on summer camps to train unemployed women. Mrs. Roosevelt presided.

"Instead of continuing discussion of the problem of youth," Mrs. Moon said, "I wish to discuss the problem of women who have reached the ripe old age of 35."

Mrs. Moon said that of 15,000 women who sought aid in Chicago, 60 per cent were between the ages of 40 and 60. These women, she said, had lost their jobs as a result of the depression and were unable to find employment because of their age.

Mrs. Moon's talk followed that of Dr. George Zook, United States commissioner of education, who pointed out that while employment of young people under 18 has been restricted, education is not provided for all of them. Only 60 per cent of the young people of high school age are in school, and only 31 per cent of those of college age are in colleges or other schools, Dr. Zook said. This means, he said, 3,000,000 young men and women are neither employed nor in school.

Aubrey Williams, assistant administrator of the Emergency Relief Administration, suggested that work begin in the organization of groups for summer camps for unemployed women and promised assistance of the relief administration.

Establishment of 25 centers for unemployed women as educational laboratories was included in plans outlined by Miss Hilda Smith, specialist in workers' education of the Public Works Administration.

Mrs. Roosevelt at a press conference following the session at the White House said she felt National planning could be accomplished if people were not "terrified by words."

"I don't think there is anything that can not be done if people have enough patience and courage and don't tremble at the words people choose as labels," she said.

"It seems as though our intelligence is forcing us to see that we have to plan on a large scale as we have to plan our homes or anything else to make life easier."

Mrs. Roosevelt declined to give the words she had in mind.

Mrs. Roosevelt will go to Philadelphia Friday to speak before the National convention of the Y. W. C. A. While there she will attend a meeting of the Jewish Hassadah.

Saturday night she will go to Alderson, W. Va., to inspect the womens' Federal prison there. Afterward she will got to New York, where she will visit women's organizations in Westchester County with Mrs. Daniel O'Day.

Newspaper Casualties.

MRS. GEORGE Horace Lorimer, wife of the editor of the Saturday Evening Post, has contributed two pieces of jewelry for the novelty-and-antique table of the Washington Newspaper Women's Club's May Day Fair. One is a rare cameo, and the other is an exquisitely cut rose quartz necklace.

Envied will be the woman who carries home one of these from the gala event planned for Tuesday night in the auditorium of the National Press Club.

* * * *

Late news bulletins on the famous Fair include mention of a kennel of America's most popular "dogs" as a special attraction. One fair scribbler reports 15 pounds of hot dogs were led into her office on a leash in preparation for the party. Here's hoping the mustard holds out.

* * * *

Illness and accident has been thrusting an interfering finger into the newspaper girls' planning this week—to no avail. The plans go merrily on. Margaret Hart, in charge of cashiers, booth assistants and what-not, has demonstarted the power of mind over matter in regard to a nasty, persistent cold.

Katherine Brooks had an automobile door shut on her foot Saturday because she didn't pull it inside the car quickly enough and has had to limp around with said foot in a bed-room slipper.

* * * *

Margaret Germond, who has the White Elephant Booth, turned over in bed too quickly the other night and threw a muscle out of place and has had to have one arm tightly strapped ever since—yet she's put through her dual job which included the supervision of all publicity excellently.

And Mrs. Pickett has had a bad cold and a blood-vessel burst in one of her eyes—not extremely serious, but most annoying!

Or Was It Pull?

MR. WILKE of Warner Brothers is in town. It seems he came to give "Jig Saw" the once-over to see how it might go if made into a movie.

* * * *

He always stays at one of the city's biggest hotels, but this week he found himself phoning all over town. Apparently not a room was to be had.

At last, weary and annoyed, he called up the chief at his favorite hostelry and made a big, special plea.

The answer was the best suite.

* * * *

Incidentally, a rumor that seems to have both its feet planted in the soil of fact, indicates "Jig Saw" will be turned into a movie and by Mr. Wilke's company. Maybe they can do something about that limping last act in which so few of the actors knew their lines on the first night.

The Famous Mae West Curves Aren't Yet a Fad in Hollywood

Returned Visitor Reports Actresses All Extremely Thin, and—Another Illusion Gone—Mae Does it With a Little Padding Here and There.

MAE WEST'S FAMOUS curves, reputed to be changing the standard of feminine figures, are not yet the fashion in moviedom, according to Mrs. Sydney Lust, of Washington, who recently returned from Hollywood, where she and her husband attended the convention of motion picture exhibitors.

Done With Padding.

"I was surprised to find all the actresses extremely thin," Mrs. Lust said yesterday. "Since the camera enlarges, they must be almost emaciated to appear slender on the screen. Mae West, who is alleged to be making curves stylish, weighs only 116 pounds. Her voluptuous contours, pinched in to a wasp waist, is the result of clever padding."

Mrs. Lust remarked keeping thin by strenuous exercises and massage, rather than by dieting, is an important factor to all actresses. The only fat women in Hollywood are those who have no screen aspirations.

"Slenderness is as much the Hollywood fashion as blonde hair," continued Mrs. Lust. "And practically every girl goes in for golden locks whether she happens to be an actress or not. Waitresses, salesgirls, society women—all have light hair. A brunette woman is as rare as a blonde man in Hollywood. That probably accounts for the fact that Dolores del Rio attracts so much attention wherever she goes; she has dared to flaunt the Hollywood beauty chart by retaining her black tresses."

Mrs. Lust believes most actresses are unspoiled, sincere and peculiarly unaffected by the tinseled atmosphere.

"In the first place," she explained, "they are not elaborate dressers. Their street clothes are tailored and are unusually plain. Of course when they appear at special events, they are exquisitely attired because they will be the center of attention.

In discussing other actresses glimpsed at the Ambassador, Mrs. Lust was lavish in her praise of their beauty and poise.

"For one who is pretentious, there are dozens of natural girls in Hollywood," she asserted. "Bette Davis, Joan Blondell, and Ruby Keeler are three good examples of actresses who are as unaffected as any girls."

She maintained many Hollywood women are as intellectual as they are beautiful and gracious.

"Mary Astor is an excellent conversationalist," she commented. "Ann Harding is another who is extremely intellectual. I was surprised to find, however, Miss Harding is less beautiful than she appears on the screen. He hair, for instance, is medium-blonde, its platinum effect being achieved by lighting. The beauty of her features is also enhanced by the camera. She is attractive and gracious, but not so pleasing to the eye as I had expected. Thelma Todd, on the other hand, is much more beautiful, for no camera could successfully translate the loveliness of her blue eyes."

Beauty Masque Stimulates Skin Yet Relaxes It

Creator Combined Recent Discoveries, Ancient Methods.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THIS NEW beauty masque is an exciting discovery.

Once it is heated to a semi-liquid form, brushed on the face and throat, and permitted to harden into a compact masque it awakens the tissues, stimulates them. It exerts a regular, but mild pressure, on the underlying skin and facial muscles, forcing the face into a wholesome "rest cure."

It was created by a woman whose name has become synonymous with dependable beauty preparations. She combined the most recent discoveries of science with all the ancients knew of beauty masques and fused them into this product. Her aim was to find something which would resculpture the face, iron out the lines, and restore vivacity and a healthy natural radiance to the complexion.

The masque keeps the skin at an even temperature; an important condition in bringing about the most effective revitalizing results. At the same time it forms a close-fitting whole, permeable for air, and in no way an obstacle to natural skin breathing.

The young lady who represents the well-known beauty specialist in a local shop said this preparation had been received enthusiastically. At the end of her fingertips she had a long and impressive list of prominent Washington women who had tried the masque and declared themselves delighted.

They've Dropped.

When rodilacque bags appeared on the scene a couple of seasons ago they created a sensation, and sold for high prices. But now, it is possible to purchase them in red, brown, or white at a local shop for $1.

Their hard, shiny surfaces may be scrubbed with soap and water. And so may their pique linings.

Their simplicity recommends them to people of conservative taste. Their durability endears them to shoppers with a practical turn of mind. An indefinable chic makes them favorites with smartly dressed women. And, of course, their low price gives them a send-off to everyone.

• • • •

They Have Originality.

It isn't an easy matter to find sketches of Washington which do not strike one as stereotyped. But a downtown store has a folder which contains twenty, noticeable for their originality.

Each one is beautifully executed. There are scenes of the well-known "sights" and others of lovely hidden away places.

More Like Home.

If you've never used a powder pouch you have a pleasure in store for you. It's a treat to take off the shine with an honest to goodness puff and loose powder from your own box.

An F street shop has a new batch of moire pouches, all rubberlined. They come in yellow, green, cerise, brown, black, and purple, and cost only 25 cents.

• • • •

Ann Harding's Jewelry.

Clip earnings like those Ann Harding wore in a recent picture are available in Washington now. They fasten securely without a bit of pinch and follow the upward curve of the ear in truly modernistic manner.

The same type of earring may be bought in several different styles, ranging from rhinestone wings to gold and silver curlycues.

• • • •

For Amateur Photographers.

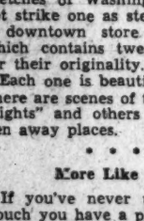
Doubters may see for themselves if they will drop past a downtown store. Pocket-sized cameras, perfect take-offs of the expensive variety, are on display with sample pictures.



The rolls of films cost only a dime.

If Junior wants camera practice — and he should have it before you invest in an expensive machine — give him a chance to learn on one of these.

The President's Favorite Dessert Is Chocolate Ice Cream.

By Ann Barrett.

IF there's chocolate in it, it's okay. That goes for pretty nearly the whole Nation, including President Roosevelt, who puts no dessert past a big plate of chocolate ice cream.

Others prefer the black-and-white effect of the chocolate-cream roll pictured. Or a plump chocolate-cream pie with upstanding meringue. Or crispy chocolate waffles. Or——.

Chocolate-Cream Roll.

Start with 4 egg-yolks beaten thick and lemon-colored. Beat 2-3 cup granulated sugar into these. Then beat in 2 squares (ounces) cooking chocolate (first melted over hot water). Next, mix and sift together 5 tablespoons sifted general-use flour, ¼ teaspoon baking powder, ¼ teaspoon salt; and fold into first mixture. Then fold in 4 stiffly-beaten egg whites, and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Pour into shallow, greased pan (about 10 by 15 inches) lined with greased paper. Bake in hot oven (about 400 F.) 12 to 15 minutes.

Next turn cake out onto clean towel dusted with about 4 tablespoons powdered sugar. Roll up the towel right along with the cake, just like a jelly-roll. Let cool. Then unroll, and spread with 1½ cups heavy cream whipped with 1-3 cup confectioner's sugar and flavored with ½ teaspoon vanilla. (Also sprinkle with chopped nuts if you like.) Then roll up again, and frost or dust with confectioner's sugar.

Chocolate Ice Cream.

For the kind of ice cream that makes President Roosevelt happy, here's how: First, scald 1¾ cups milk (in top of double boiler), melt 2 squares (ounces) cooking chocolate in it, then add ½ cup sugar. Next mix 1 tablespoon cornstarch with ¼ cup cold milk. Add this to hot mixture, stirring constantly. Cook over hot water 10 minutes. Then take from fire and add 1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin (first softened in 1 tablespoon cold water). Stir well, and chill. Then add ⅛ teaspoon salt and 2 teaspoons vanilla. Finally fold in 1 cup medium or heavy cream (whipped first). Turn into coldest tray of automatic refrigerator and freeze about 3 hours, stirring from back to front each hour. (Or freeze in crank freezer.)

Chocolate Cream Pie.

First scald 3 cups milk in top of double boiler and melt 2 squares (ounces) cooking chocolate in it. Then mix 6 tablespoons cornstarch smooth in 1-3 cup cold milk. Stir a little of hot mixture into this, then slowly add to hot mixture in doublt boiler—stirring constantly. Cover and cook 30 minutes. Then mix 3 egg yolks with ½ cup sugar and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Combine this with hot mixture and cook two minutes more. Cool, add ½ teaspoon vanilla, and turn into 9-inch, baked pie shell. Then cover with meringue made from 3 egg whites beaten with 6 tablespoons confectioner's sugar. Bake at 325 F. till brown. (If you'd like a generous whipped-cream top on this pie instead of meringue, you might use fewer eggs or none at all, in chocolate filling. But for meringue top, filling needs eggs.)

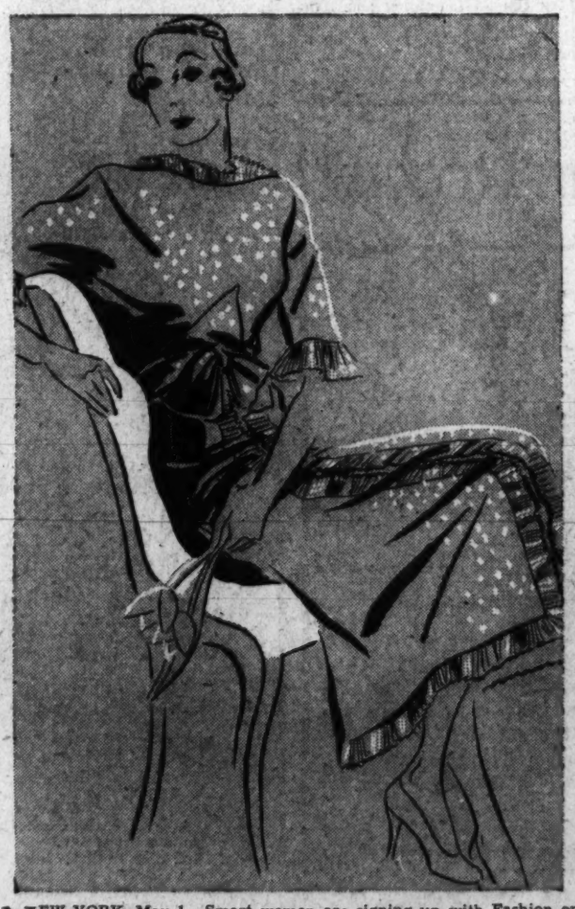
The Ever-Present Polka Dot Worn All Day and Into Night



NEW YORK, May 1.—Smart women are signing up with Fashion on the dotted line. An dit's a line which extends from top to toe, from morning to evening, from sports events to dances . . . with dots ranging all the way from pin head size to generous 50 centers.

Becoming to All.

Polka dots, hardy perennials, are in full blossom again and they have their usual fresh, clean, neat look which is practically universally becoming.

In the daytime they're found on crepes, on heavy sheers, on chiffons and on satins. Later you'll be sure to find them in linens and cottons.

In the evening, besides the crepes and chiffons and satins, they pop out on organdies and mousselines de soie.

Occasionally the dots vary in size in confetti effect, but usually they are all the same size throughout. Those with a diameter of about 3-16 of an inch—the size of a small pea—are most popular.

For the Evening.

For daytime you'll find them made up into slick trim shirtwaist dresses, into two-piece tailored dresses; into clean-cut jacket dresses with crisp accents of white pique, linen or crepe; and into charming, soft afternoon types with such details as shirrings and fine pleatings. You can see one popular use of pleating trim in the sketch.

For evening the dots are apt to be of larger size. Tailored restaurant dresses with jackets are effective in polka dots. Then there are more ruffly types with covered shoulders, and quite formal dresses with separate capes made of the sheer or crisp materials liberally besprinkled with dots.

Navy, brown and black with white dots are the most-in-fashion colors for daytime.

A new note which can be very effective on the right person is the use of dark dots on pastel grounds, as black, blue or brown dots on a dusty pink ground.

And for evening dark or bright dots on white or pastel grounds are smartest.

Polka dot dresses of the types described are available in Washington in all the better shops and department stores.

Birth Control Issue in School Hotly Contested

Superintendent Ousted; Now Question to Be Laid Before Governor.

New Castle, Del., April 30 (U.P.). The vexing problem of whether school children here should be taught birth control, as well as sex hygiene, was to be placed today before Gov. Clayton Douglass Buck.

New Castle has divided into two camps over the controversy because Henry E. Snavely, superintendent of schools, wanted to teach birth control.

The board of education ousted Snavely, who had been superintendent for 16 years.

A group of so-called "modernists" demand the superintendent be reinstated or the board resign itself for being "nearsighted."

Newman T. Booth, president of the board, said the quarrel began a year ago when it was decided to teach sex hygiene in the schools and Snavely decided to teach the subject himself.

"His views included methods of birth control rather than self control," Booth said. "Because we believe such teachings should be founded on individual decency and purity of life, we found his dismissal necessary."

Booth added conditions in the public schools made it necessary to teach sex hygiene. Several girl students were expectant mothers and the moral situation had to be improved, he said.

Snavely contended people "must face facts for theories of a bygone age, for the day is past when purity in the older sense can be maintained." He said the automobile and the new freedom granted youth has made external control of conduct virtually impossible.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Angina Pectoris.

The term angina pectoris is used somewhat loosely for any disorder which causes pain to be felt in the region of the heart. If the pain is felt to start behind the breast bone and to radiate down the left arm, and if, at the same time, the patient has a feeling of constriction or pressure in the chest and a sense of impending death or great danger, it is felt that the case is one of true angina. Pains felt in the chest near the heart and manifestly of little importance take on some dignity by being called false angina.

The use of the term false angina has caused the other group of cases to be called true anginas or even true angina pectoris. Even the latter condition is composed of more than one disorder and has more than one cause. Some of these cases should be called coronary embolus and some coronary sclerosis. Some of the cases of true angina pectoris are due to atheroma of the coronary arteries, some to atheroma of the arteries, some to disease of the heart muscle, particularly to ilands and patches thereof; some to allergy similar to that which causes asthma, hay fever and hives, and some to a lack of sugar or a lack of sugar and a low alkalinity of the blood.

In those cases that are allergic, treatment consists in the use of remedies which soothe spasm. Using tobacco is responsible for some of these cases. A skin test generally shows sensitization to tobacco. The fundamental treatment to prevent recurrence in such cases is to stop the use of tobacco, or whatever the sensitizing substance may be.

Culbertson on Bridge

Rescuing the Opponents.

Many players who have a sound knowledge of Bridge theory seem to lose their sense of proportion when they actually sit down at the table. They are able to value their hands fairly accurately and under most circumstances express such valuation in terms of partnership bidding, but let the situation deviate in the slightest degree from strictly orthodox lines and, either from lack of imagination or through inexperience, they are unable to rise to the emergency. I know of no single instance where the immortal "what might have been" applies more aptly than to the science of Contract Bridge. An excellent case in point is a hand played recently in a New York club.

East, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.

	♠ J 7 ♡ K 10 4 3 ◇ A J 8 7 5 ♣ 8 5
♠ 10 9 6 ♡ 8 7 5 2 ◇ 4 3 ♣ 9 4 3 2	N W E S	♠ A 4 3 ♡ Q J 6 ◇ Q 10 9 ♣ A J 7 6
	♠ K Q 8 5 2 ♡ A 9 ◇ K 6 2 ♣ K Q 10

East (evidently not a disciple of the Culbertson System) chose to open the bidding, vulnerable, with one notrump. The catastrophe from which he escaped only by an opponent's beneficence might have shown him the error of his ways. South very properly doubled and poor West must have felt the breath of approaching doom. However, since he knew he could do nothing by bidding except make matters worse, he managed to pass cheerfully. Possibly his expectant and pleading expression softened the heart of North, or possibly it was only North's brain that was soft; at any rate, without an instant's hesitation, he galloped to the rescue—that is, his opponents' rescue—by brilliantly bidding two diamonds.

It is not particularly interesting to record that North and South eventually played the hand at three notrump and naturally had no trouble in making it.

Our concern is with "what might have been" had North made a Penalty Pass, which was unquestionably the proper bid on his holding, and had East also passed. The result would have been rather exciting. After South opens his fourth-best spade, regardless of whether Declarer holds off with his Ace until the third round or not, the contract must be defeated five tricks, for the not inconsiderable penalty of 2,000 points. No matter what card Declarer leads after winning the spade Ace, he can not avoid being squeezed on South's remaining spades.

Even if East should use the S-O-S Redouble over North's pass, the best he can do by playing the hand at two clubs doubled is to go down 1,400 points. Therefore, by merely bidding and making a nonvulnerable game, the North-South team sold out rather cheaply.

What Today Means

"Taurus".

If May 1 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 a. m. until noon, from 1 to 3 p. m. and from 6 to 8 p. m. The danger periods are from 7 to 9 a. m. from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 9 to 11 p. m.

In your social or business life on this date avoid crowds. It may be advisable to watch your temper very carefully. No matter what the provocation may be make every effort not to become so angry that you may say things that might result in a quarrel. It is just as well for you to remember your temper does not require very much to rouse it, and that when thoroughly mad, your tongue has a tendency to say things which are regretted afterward.

The woman born on May 1 is of a very impetuous nature, as a rule. You will find life much smoother if you refrain from "flying off the handle" so quickly. Endeavor not to be ready to take any and everything said in a discussion where criticism enters as being said for your particular benefit, for you may find that many times the remarks are not intended to be personal in so far as you are concerned.

As soon as the child born on May 1 can talk and make demands, discourage any tendency on its part to be whiney when it makes a simple request. This habit must be "nipped in the bud." A childish voice, which at every request expresses a plaintive complaining note can become one of the most irritating things imaginable, and it is invariably the parent's own fault. It can be corrected easily if handled properly as soon as the youngster starts to trying it as a persuasive means to an end.

I WAS A SPY

By MARTHE McKENNA

What Has Gone Before.

Marthe Cnockaert McKenna, Belgian woman, served as a British secret agent during the World War. In previous installments of this gripping story, she told of the German invasion of her country in 1914 and of being attached as a nurse to a German military hospital. Her family has been scattered during the onrush of the gray-clad German legions across Belgium. You can pick up the story at this point and continue it daily in The Washington Post.

One morning, a fortnight after our arrival, I had returned after night duty to our lodging. It was about 7 o'clock in the morning and nobody was about but my mother, to whom I was talking in the kitchen. There was no knock, but suddenly the back door creaked and the handle began to turn, so that our eyes became riveted upon it. In the entrance stood Lucelle Deldonck, her gray hair hanging in wisps, her face ghastly with fatigue. She put a finger to her lips for silence, while my mother helped her to a chair.

"No one must know that I have been here," she told us in a low voice. "I have had much difficulty in finding you, and had I not seen through the kitchen window that you were alone, I should not have come in now."

By that time we had finlly given her up as lost, and we listened amazed to the inexplicable way in which she was talking, the while she gulped some brandy which I had handed her.

"But where have you come from, Lucelle?"

"From over the frontier and I have news for you. Your three sons are all safe, with the army at the Yser. Here are three letters. My own family are also safe, thank God—but to let you know this is not the reason which brings me to Roulers—listen," she chuckled, "I am a middle-aged woman and I thought last year that I was in a good way to spend the rest of my days in peace and quietness. But I tell you I have just tramped forty or so miles from Holland, and I have a further ten miles to go. Should the Germans know I was here it would mean——" She stopped dead as though a hand had been clapped over her mouth. Then she rose wearily. "Well, I must be going," she finished, "I am glad to have seen you both again. Remember, no one must know that I have been in this town." At the door she paused as if a thought had struck her and looked hard at me. "Martha," she said slowly, "you are young and strong. Would you like to serve your country?"

I knew what she must mean, a spy, and for a moment I was filled with horror. I knew that spies existed in Belgium and that they were serving their country, yet somehow I had regarded them as things inhuman and far removed from my own sphere.

"If my daughter wishes to serve I give her willingly and proudly, just as I have given my sons," exclaimed my mother placing her hands gently on my shoulders.

"You realize that in this occupation your life will be at stake every day of your life, Martha. What do you say?"

Things were beginning to appear to me in a new light. "I am waiting for my instructions, Lucelle," was my reply.

"Brave girl, Martha. At present I shall give you no instructions. I am a member of the British Secret Intelligence Commission. I can tell you nothing until I have communicated with them, for it is from them ultimately that you will get your orders. In a few days' time expect to receive a summons from me, and in whatever manner this comes to you show no surprise. For a few days there are matters which will keep me not far from Roulers. And now, good-by," she smiled, "I am going away across the open fields like most of we travelers do who have no pass from the Germans." Then she slipped away, leaving my mother and me staring into each other's eyes, but neither of us spoke a word of what had passed.

There was an old vegetable woman, nicknamed by the German soldiers Canteen Ma and a great favorite among them, who used to come in from the country several times a week with fruit and vegetables in a four-wheeled car, calling at the houses of her various clients for orders. Her pass to move freely about the countryside existed owing to the fact that she had a contract to supply the German canteen with fruit.

She was nearly 70 years old with white elfin locks and the cheeks of a schoolboy. It was three days after Lucelle's visit and I was just leaving for the hospital in the early morning when I saw her after her usual manner coming down the street leading her old nag and singing and whistling to herself some old-time chanson of the people.

"Good day, Mademoiselle," she hailed in her high cracked voice, approaching with a basket on her arm. "It's cold, but a beautiful morning to be out early. What about some nice beans, Mademoiselle—cheap today." I was about to call the servant girl when Canteen Ma stooped to put her basket down on the step and at the same moment slipped something small into my hand. "Take a look at that in the seclusion of your bedroom," she whispered. The servant came at my call and I hurried trembling upstairs to my room and shut the door. It was a small piece of intricately folded paper.

"Come to the second farm on the right-hand side of the road to Zwevezeele. Ask for Lisette, who is expecting to see you at nine o'clock tonight"—read the anonymous contents. The idea crossed my mind that it might be a trap of the "Berlin Vampires," but I determined to risk that. If it was from Lucelle I must see her at all costs.

I determined to take no risks with "Vampires" on the roads that evening and gave myself a full hour to reach my destination, making a wide detour across the fields. I must admit my heart was in my mouth. My only excuse, in case I was questioned, for being in the fields at that hour would be that I had been asked to visit a sick woman in my capacity as trained nurse. The ground was hard with frost which made the going easy. Here and there soldiers carrying lights were moving along the footpaths. After what seemed an eternity I came out on the road some distance beyond the farm, and that short space of time during which I was retracing my steps was the most nerve-racking of the evening.

At the back door I knocked like a conspirator, realizing that for better or for worse I had finally taken my life into my hands. The door creaked slightly.

"What do you want?" asked a muffled voice.

"I have come to see Lisette."

A grunt, shuffling of feet on the stone slabs and the door opened wide on to a dark passage. A figure was standing well back against the wall. Unexpectedly a hand grasped and hurried me up an unlit flight of stairs somewhere at the back of the house. I was pushed into a room with heavily curtained windows, illuminated only by the dancing flames of the fire.

"Pierre," said Lucelle, who was standing with her back to the hearth. "Give me good warning if you hear anything suspicious." Then we were alone. "Child, I rejoice to see you." Lucelle motioned me to a chair beside the fire and seated herself opposite.

"Marthe," Lucelle started, "from this day forward at your own wish you have become a spy in the service of the enemies of the conquerors who now rule your country. From time to time you will receive certain orders or instructions and you will comply with these to the best of your ability. In your position as nurse at the Roulers Hospital, where you will be constantly in contact with enemy soldiers of all ranks, you will have exceptional opportunities of learning of troop movements, locations of military formations, artillery concentrations and positions, the forming of supply dumps and of all the numerous military activities which take place daily in a garrison town near the line. Apart, therefore, from the execution of special orders it will be your duty to report all military information, even if it may seem to you of the smallest importance. Remember it is not for you to judge the significance of what you may learn and what you see around you. There are military experts over the frontier who will understand how to sift the information."

Bonus Army Threat Given To Roosevelt

Invasion Due This Week, Committee Warns in Curt Note.

Flop-House Majority Is in Hearty Support, Says Statement.

The threat of another bonus army invasion this week was laid on the door step of the White House yesterday, when the Veteran National Rank and File Committee wrote to the President that its committee would appear there on Thursday afternoon "to start preliminary negotiations for the care of veterans while here."

The letter, couched in blunt language, informed the President: "This committee expects you to use your office in procuring a permit for a parade of veterans on the above-mentioned date. By the time you receive this or shortly thereafter, you will, no doubt, be informed of the departure of the vanguard of the New York contingent, which is expected in Washington on May 2 or 3."

It was further stated that the committee has "the backing and support of the overwhelming majority of the men now stationed in the several flop-houses in Washington under the highly questionable 'care and discipline' of the Transient Bureau, and will appear to lend their voice to the demands presented."

"As there are several matters pertaining to the present march that must be discussed," went on the letter, which was signed by Harold Nickerson as acting secretary-treasurer of the organization, "this committee expects an early response to this communication."

A statement attached to the letter, which was distributed to newspapers, declared that the movement had the support of the National World War veterans, a national organization with headquarters in Atlanta, Ga. The plans call for a march on the White House, a demand for care and maintenance during the convention here and a determination to remain in Washington until Congress accedes to the veterans' demands.

The Veterans National Rank and File committee has occupied office space at 1410 G street northwest, for two months. The office was empty yesterday when a reporter for The Post called there in an endeavor to learn more of the organization's plans.

Samuel J. Hohberger, of 4600 Fourteenth street northwest, was ordered yesterday to appear before the Liquor Control Board Thursday to show cause why his license should not be revoked because he allegedly sold liquor without the purchaser having presented a prescription.

Tax Group Holds Rally in Annapolis

Better Government League Seeks Cut in Rate.

Annapolis, Md., April 30 (Spl.).—The new better government league of Anne Arundel County, which has been conducting a series of district meetings to acquaint tax payers and voters generally with alleged poor management of county affairs, to the end that taxes may be greatly reduced, brought its campaign to Annapolis with a mass meeting today in the House of Delegates chamber at the State House.

Addresses were delivered by E. Churchill Maury, Eighth District, president; Clarence M. White, Second District, secretary; Mrs. Ruth Parker Eason, Glen Burnie; Mrs. Clarence M. White, Second District, and Louis N. Phipps and Reginald C. Lamb, Annapolis. The speakers emphasized the steadily mounting tax rate until Anne Arundel has the highest figure of any county in the State.

The league is a nonpartisan organization, but has a political angle in that it has named a standing committee to pass on candidates seeking office in the November election.

New Wage Pact Averts Rail Strike

Kansas City Southern Ry., Union Compromise.

Kansas City, April 30 (AP).—President C. E. Johnston, of the Kansas City Southern Railroad, announced today a new wage agreement, effective tomorrow, had been signed with union trainmen, averting a threatened strike.

The agreement affects engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen and yardmen and represents a compromise between the "Southern plan" and the old rules under which employes have worked.

For a year the railroad and the trainmen brotherhoods engaged in a controversy which grew out of the railroad's announced intention to institute a plan which would have given the workmen in the brotherhoods a basic pay schedule unrelated to distance of the run, and with the abolishment of many rules built up in the last 60 years.

Rains and Brains: Hatful of One Just Nil, the Other, a Calamity

You Can Start From There; These Government Bureau Statistical Yarns Have a Meaning All Their Own—Sometimes Two.

Didn't it rain . . .

Mr. Noah wouldn't believe this, but the Department of Agriculture says that only once in ten years Washington can expect rain at the rate of more than one-tenth of an inch a minute for a period of ten minutes.

To furnish information for the construction of storm sewers, D. L. Yarnell, of the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering, has charted rates of precipitation and their frequencies for 206 Weather Bureau stations.

When rain falls at the rate of a tenth of an inch a minute it means that in 10 minutes on a city lot 50 by 100 feet more than 3,100 gallons of water will fall. That is a lot of water and sewers must be designed to carry it off, or city cellars are swimming pools.

Hat size is no more an index of brain size than it is an index of brain quality. This has been scientifically proved by Dr. T. D. Stewart, anthropologist, of the Smithsonian Institution. Dr. Stewart has devised an improved method for studying brain size by determining the cubic capacity of the skull.

Dr. Stewart then obtained 40 Eskimo skulls of practically the same size in external measurements. Applying his method, he discovered that there was a variation of 230 cubic centimeters, or 15 per cent, in their brain capacity.

Formerly, inside measurements were made by filling the cranium with mustard seed or shot and then emptying it into a standard measure. The new measure is more accurate and proves that there is a lot of "ivory" in some heads. But the world can't find out until death.

Several years ago, a chemist of the Department of Agriculture devised a process for removing poisonous spray residue from fruits and vegetables. This, a method of washing with acid and alkali solutions, was to take off deadly arsenic from foods on which it had been sprayed to fight insects and fungus.

Last week, the department announced that the United States Court of Claims had awarded a public service patent to Arthur M. Henry, the inventor, over the claims of two Californians, who contended they had invented the process prior to Henry's filing.

The decision ended more than 7 years of litigation contesting the original patent granted Henry. Since the public service patent, finally made secure, is free to anyone wishing to use it, royalty fees which, in the end, would have been passed on to the consumer, have been saved. It also means that with the process cheaper, it will be adopted more thoroughly and the public afforded greater protection.

Meanwhile, the department has announced that it is making special investigations to find new spray materials which will be deadly to insect and disease, but harmless to humans.

Senators Meet Douglas Today On D. C. Funds

Session Follows Budget Bureau Request for Relief Increase.

A new basis for determining the fiscal relations between the Federal and District governments will be discussed at a meeting of the Senate District Appropriations subcommittee with Budget Director Lewis W. Douglas today.

The committee, headed by Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, has asked the Budget Director to appear when the committee convenes in executive session at 10:30 a. m. He is the only witness the committee intends to hear during the day.

Broad principles which shall govern the revision of the District appropriation bill as recommended by the Budget Bureau and changed by the House are to be decided by the committee after the Budget Director has been heard. The committee is disposed to increase the Federal appropriation beyond the $5,700,000 recommended by the Budget Bureau and also to raise the amounts provided for various activities, including schools, public welfare and relief.

An additional $1,700,000 for emergency unemployment relief was recommended by the Budget Bureau to the committee yesterday. The recommendation was made in the form of a supplemental estimate and would increase the $1,300,000 now in the bill up to $3,000,000 for next year. This is $1,000,000 less than asked by the District Commissioners.

The increased relief funds was one of several requests made by the District Commissioners for approval by the Budget Bureau. The other items have not been acted on.

Request for $30,000 for the purchase of new fire fighting apparatus was made at the hearings yesterday by Fire Chief Schrom. Officials of the public welfare, water, National Capital Parks, militia and United States Marshal's offices and departments were heard by the committee.

The commission order forbids the company to operate any passenger vehicles in Ohio during the suspension period. It is the result of an accident at Elyria a few weeks ago in which six bus passengers were killed. Several other passengers were injured.

Davis Urges U. S. Project Wage Inquiry

"Kick-Back" Racket Is Also Included in Resolution.

Contractors Paying Less Than Prevailing Pay, Senator Asserts.

Senatorial investigation of wages paid employes by contractors on Government buildings in the National Capital and throughout together with the "kick back racket" is provided for in a resolution introduced in the Senate yesterday by Senator James J. Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania.

Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, joined with the Pennsylvanian in sponsoring the investigation.

Introduction of the resolution was attributable to the quarrel between contractors and carpenters over wages which has threatened to tie up operations in several Federal buildings in Washington, Senator Davis said.

Favorable Report Expected.

The investigation would be made by the Senate committee on education and labor, of which Walsh is chairman, or a sub-committee. Favorable report is expected by that committee, Davis said. The resolution then will go before the committee on audit and expenditures for approval of funds to make the inquiry.

Davis charged that contractors were paying less than prevailing wages to their workmen.

"It is notorious what contractors have been and are doing along the Mississippi River, the Senator said. "Contractors bid high enough to pay prevailing wages and when they secure the contracts seek to cut down the pay. They search for cheap help, import them to the location of the building project, and when that is completed, leave the employes as a charge on the relief rolls of the community in which the building is constructed."

Davis is coauthor of the Bacon-Davis prevailing wage law, which requires that workers on Government projects must be paid not less than the wage prevailing for the particular class of work in the locality of the project.

Aims of Resolution.

The resolution specifies investigation into "the relationship existing between contractors and their employes engaged in the construction of any public building, public work or building or work in the District of Columbia, financed in whole or in part by loans or grants from the United States, or in the repair thereof, with a view to determining:

"First, if such employes receive the prevailing rates of wages of building trades workers; second, if such employes are forced to give up any part of the compensation to which they are entitled under their contract of employment, a practice known as the 'kick-back racket,' and third, if such employes are discharged and refused further employment on such construction projects for protesting against such 'kick-back racket' or other abuses."

Byrns Pledges Action on PWA Loan to D. C.

House Scheduled to Get $20,000,000 Bill by Next Week.

Cooperation of House leaders was pledged Chairman Norton, of the House District Committee yesterday in her efforts to obtain action on the District PWA loan bill before the next District day.

After conferring with Majority Leader Byrns and Representative Bankhead, chairman of the Rules Committee, Mrs. Norton announced that she would ask the District Committee tomorrow for authorization to ask for a special rule on the measure.

Byrns told Mrs. Norton that she might present the bill at the first pause in consideration of National legislation, which probably would be the latter part of next week.

The House District Committee is scheduled to report the bill favorably tomorrow after a brief hearing. The measure, which passed the Senate last week, authorizes the District Commissioners to borrow $20,000,000 from the Public Works Administration for expenditures on municipal projects. Only 70 per cent would have to be repaid in yearly installments.

Mrs. Norton said that the special rule probably would carry limitations on debate and amendments, but that the details would be worked out by the Rules Committee.

Byrns told the District Committee chairman that he saw no objection to the bill, which passed the Senate without any opposition on the floor. The only threat of objection in the House has come from Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas.

The Federation of Civic Associations yesterday submitted to the House District Committee a long list of projects desired chiefly for the colored residents of Washington, provided the $20,000,000 loan is obtained.

These include a varity of school improvements, recreation centers, playgrounds, an Emergency Hospital branch in the northeast, additional branch libraries, and a stormwater sewer for Watt's Run.

Senate Again Set to Act on Roberts' Job

Nomination as Peoples Counsel Replaced on Calendar.

McCarran to Satisfy Self "Criticisms" Are Baseless.

Nomination of William A. Roberts, special assistant corporation counsel of the District, to be people's counsel was replaced on the Senate executive calendar yesterday on motion of Senator Patrick A. McCarran (Democrat), Nevada.

Nominations of Roberts and of Richmond B. Keech, former people's counsel, to be a member of the public Utilities Commission were confirmed by the Senate Saturday while McCarran was absent.

The Senator said he wanted more time to investigate complaints that Roberts was too closely identified with the views of and too sympathetic with interests of the utilities corporations. That criticism was lodged with the Senator by George E. Sullivan, a delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations. Sullivan said he did not pretend to represent the federation.

Dr. George C. Havenner, president, and other delegates to the federation and heads of individual citizens' associations, have publicly indorsed appointment of Roberts.

Criticism of Roberts has brought a deluge of denial to the office of McCarran, indorsements being presented by National as well as local representatives of various consumers' groups. An anonymous attack on Roberts, printed on a dodger, was secretly distributed in the Senate Office Building after closing hours last Saturday.

McCarran said a copy had been thrust beneath his office door. The "behind-the-back" attack purported to come from representatives of consumers.

"I simply want to make sure that the interests of the people will be protected by appointment of men having the public interest in view," McCarran said "I have not made any criticism of Roberts. It is probable I shall complete my investigation in a day or two and action will be had on the appointment before the end of the week."

Joe Cronin Defends Strategy in Removing Weakening Whitehill

Star Pitcher Was Tiring, He Avers

Figured Yankees Were Through If Russell Could End Rally.

Stewart, MacFayden to Be on Slab in Second Game Today.

By Frank H. Young.

"I GUESS all of the fans are 'second-guessing' me for not leaving Earl Whitehill in the box," said Skipper Joe Cronin, of the Nats, in the locker room after yesterday's game. "But that's what a manager is up against when he has a decision to make and it turns out badly. As far as today's change goes, I'd do it again every time the same situation came up."

What Cronin was referring to, of course, was his yanking of Starter Whitehill in the eighth yesterday in favor of Jack Russell, with two Yankees out and the tying run on third base.

"I figured that if Russell could get the third out the Yanks would be through for the day. Whitehill had pitched a beautiful game, but he was tired and it looked as though this was just the spot to relieve him, especially as two right-handed hitters were to open up the ninth. But the old percentage did not work. The Yanks had another kick left and they beat us. But that's baseball."

Three Yankee regulars were missing yesterday and will not participate in the current series, but, as the Indian said when he was hacking off a scalp, "what's painful for one is pleasure for the other," and the Nats are not breaking out in tears at the news. The absentees are Pitcher Vernon (Lefty) Gomez, Outfielder Earl Combs and Shortstop Red Rolfe. Gomez and Rolfe did not make the trip here with the team, the pitcher, who worked Sunday, having a bad cold, while boils and a series of minor hurts have slowed up the rookie shortfielder. Combs has an injured foot. He relieved Ruth in the ninth, McCarthy evidently figuring that Combs, injured as he was, was faster afoot than Ruth, and at this stage of the game the Yanks wanted to bolster their defense.

The two teams line up again today with the Yankees due to face another southpaw, as Walter Stewart will get the Nat assignment. Danny MacFayden, the bespectacled little right-hander, will be on the mound for New York.

A bright, new set of scales now adorn the Nat locker room and the home boys had considerable fun before yesterday's game daring Babe Ruth to get on them. But the big fellow, whom Coach Al Schacht declared only two pounds lighter than a horse, would not go near them.

The Yanks were credited with a walk, Ruth's single and Gehrig's double in the first inning, yet failed to score. It so happened that Hoag, who drew the pass, was nipped stealing before the hits were inserted.

Ben Chapman, Yankee left-fielder, has been experimenting with his batting stance. Yesterday, he was not turning quite so much to the left, the idea being that he would be in a better position to hit inside balls—his weakness last season.

Vice President John Garner and a party had a box at yesterday's game.

Bill Dickey and Buddy Myer, each of whom had his appendix removed last winter, had a long discussion on "My Operation" before the game. The debate ended in a draw, neither admitting that the other suffered more.

When Kuhel singled in the fifth, it was his sixth successive hit, his third of yesterday added to those credited him his last three times up in the Sabbath fracas with the A's.

Fitzsimmons, Giants Blank Dodgers, 5 to 0

New York, April 30 (AP).—Fred Fitzsimmons pitched the third shutout turned in by the New York Giants' pitching staff this year when he let the Brooklyn Dodgers down with five scattered blows today to give the world champions a 5-to-0 decision.

The Giants had an easy time with Van Mungo, Brooklyn's smokeball pitcher, collecting nine hits off his delivery in the eight innings he was on the mound. The other hit came in the ninth with Charley Perkins pitching.

Boxing Body Hunt To Resume Today

Business at Capitol Forces Commissioner Delay.

Buisness at the Capitol yesterday forced the District Commissioners to abandon temporarily their hunt for two suitable men to complete the personnel of the boxing commission, which must be appointed before recent legislation legalizing boxing here becomes effective.

H. Rozier Dulaney, prominent local attorney and realtor, who was to have been tendered an appointment by District Commissioner Hazen, has not yet been approached.

Chisox Swamp Cleveland, 20 to 10

Six Homers Mark Melee; Chicago Routs Four Alien Hurlers.

CHICAGO, April 30 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox batting brigade came to life today with a barrage of 18 hits, totaling 39 bases, to swamp Cleveland, 20 to 10, in the opening game of the series.

Monte Pearson, Clint Brown, Dennies Galehouse and Thornton Lee were blasted out of action, and only Belve Bean, the fifth Indian thrower, was able to halt the rampaging Sox. Zeke Bonura recorded his fourth homer of the season, Al Simmons got his third circuit clout in three days, and Jack Hayes and Joe Chamberlain helped out with one each. Joe Vosmik and Bob Holland got homers for Cleveland.

Nine Runs in Fourth.

The Sox assault reached its peak in the fourth, when nine runs rolled over. Sam Jones weakened after holding the Indians to six hits in six innings and Joe Heving finished.

Yank Homer In 9th Nips Nats, 7-4

Ruffing's Clout, With 2 On, Is Decisive After Score Is Tied.

the bat ever since he took out his pitcher's card and he has been known to hit home runs many times before with and without provocation.

The Nats had carried a very skimpy 4-3 lead into that ninth inning against the team that is their greatest challenger in the 1934 pennant race, and outside of a home run by Gehrig, the laddie known as Lou, in the fourth inning, there had been no indication that the vaunted power of the New York Yank attack would erupt in that ninth.

Earl Whitehill, who had been pitching a tolerably good game to keep the Yankees out of the lead, had been lifted by Manager Cronin back in the eighth inning when the Yanks had narrowed the score to 4-3, and the wolves in the grandstand emitted a medley of boos at Cronin for the change.

Russell got by that eighth inning, but the grandstand managers had their inning in the ninth together with the Yankees. Tony Lazzeri startled the Nats out of their composure, if any, by smacking Russell's first pitch in the ninth over the surprised countenance of Fred Schulte in center field, for a triple, and the Yanks were in a fair way of tying the score.

Dickey Gets Double.

With Lazzeri out of the way, way out on third base, Russell turned his attentions to Bill Dickey and was received with a two-base hit into left field that put the tying run across the plate and the winning run on second.

Don Heffner, a newcomer to the Yankees' lineup, laid down a bunt in the direction of the pitcher's box, and Russell couldn't find the handle on the ball for throwing purposes. On the error Heffner reached first and Dickey, third, but the worst was yet to come.

Ruffing didn't dally up there at the plate with the bat in his hand. Russell's first pitch he bashed high up into the bleachers and three more Yankee runs trailed across the plate in joyful procession. There was more to the inning, with Al Thomas pitching, but it wasn't important.

The Nats had stepped away to a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Je Kuhel got the first of his three singles into right field, and Buddy Myer doubled him to third. Manush brought him home with an infield out. The laddie known as Lou evened the score for the Yanks in the fourth with his rocket homer over the right field wall, and the Nats came back to go into a 2-1 lead in the same inning when Cecil Travis smacked a single to right after Schulte and Stone had walked with two out.

When the Yanks tied the score in the sixth in a rally which started with Hoag's single and ended with Gehrig's squeeze bunt, the Nats came back gallantly with a two-run rally on their own account with young Cecil Travis continuing to rip his way into the affections of Washington fans.

Hits Two-Bagger.

Schulte was on base by virtue of a single to right that Ruth manhandled, and Stone was on by virtue of a walk, when Travis smacked a Ruffing pitch on a bee line over third base for two bases that scored 'em both.

Whitehill endured on the mound until two were out in the eighth, by which time the Yanks had narrowed matters to 4-3, when Hoag led off with a single and eventually scored on a walk and two out, but with the righthanded Chapman at bat, Cronin extracted Whitehill in favor of Russell, who survived that inning but couldn't get anybody out in that awful ninth.

Dear Al: Pimlico Race Track, April 30.

After riding three winners today—one for his boss, C. V. Whitney—Sonny Workman has the laugh on those who thought he was through as a first-flight rider. It might have been the cool weather and, true, the horses helped, but seldom have we seen Workman in better form. He rated his horses well, whipped only when necessary and was again the whirling dervish at the finish.

Workman may have taken his time about getting down to serious riding at Miami last winter, but he's everything the doctor ordered right now. Those who were trying to separate him from that Whitney contract earlier in the year are now cashing tickets on him.

Rather dull day today for the Bennings boy. BILL.

First race—Meloy appears to have been raced into condition and is ready for a set of brackets. Knocked at the door at Havre de Grace. Rustic Cuba may have Workman in the saddle and this combination will be in the thick of the battle. Drombo, despite those disappointing efforts seems to hold the others safe.

Second race—Color Bearer has found a spot to his liking here and unless there is a surprise package among the first-outers, I believe we will have the winner. Showed a good race at the Graw last week and won at Bowie. Rustic Joe and Black Birder to take care of the others.

Third race—Kim appears as reliable as anything this jumping race offers. There is little line on the present form of this group. Inception and Iolian could complete the money picture.

Fourth race—No Saint ran some fair races in Florida last winter and he forced the pace upstate when Gold Buckle graduated. Evangelist is a fair sort of juvenile and should take the place from the Whitney entry of Mr. Gander and Black Mail, both starting for the first time.

Fifth race—Snappy Story is my special here. Recommended by Clocker Mike as a sleeper with an excellent chance of getting home in front. Moon Glory and Believer for the place and show.

Sixth race—O'Neill finished fast in a sprint at the Graw and showed me that he is ready to score in the right kind of company and at a longer route. This is the spot. Fair Billy and Soeur Blanche to do the chief chasing.

Seventh race—Golden Fate barely missed for the Bennings interests last out and may never be headed here. Irene's Bob and Ilchester to make a fight out of it.

Eighth race—Miss Morocco is an improved filly and may make it four straight. Gloritone and One Chance for the rest.

Baer, Through With Women Awhile, Sees K. O. Victory

Arrives in New York, Says He'll Knock Carnera Out of Arena.

NEW YORK, April 30 (U.P.). Max Baer, the Casanova of clout, returned to New York from California today and announced in stentorian tones that on the night of June 14 he will, by virtue of knocking Primo Carnera loose from his moorings, become heavyweight champion of the world.

Mr. Baer also made it known that he dislikes Adolf Hitler, that he dislikes Jack Sharkey, that he is not going to have anything to do with night clubs and women until after the Carnera fight, and that he is hopeful of marrying into nobility and acquiring a title.

"Never," said the bronze young Mr. Baer, "have I said, in the last three years, that I was certain I would win a fight. I'm saying it now and you can tell that big mug Carnera. I'm in better shape now than I ever was in my life, and I'm going in there and knock that guy clear out of the arena."

Ready for Work.

The glib fighter, who made something of a name for himself in the movies, probably will train at Atlantic City, and he's fretting to get down to work. He has brought his 18-year-old brother, Bud, who weighs in the neighborhood of 250 pounds, East with him to help him get ready for the title bout.

"This Carnera guy," Baer explained, "has a habit of tromping on your feet when you're in the ring with him. Well, you ought to see the dogs on this kid brother of mine. I'm going to get plenty of training for feet-tromping.

"I'm going to show these guys something they haven't had in a long time—a real fight. I'm going to stand and slug with the big guy if it's necessary, and I hope to God it is. If he tries any fouling with me, I'm going to foul right back so quick he won't know what hit him. If he tries to butt me around, I'm going to take the top of my head and bang the daylights out of him. He hasn't got a punch. He's got a shove. The only way he can hurt you is to run into you. And I'm going to lay one on that big chin of his every time he gets near me. He's nothing but a great big apple—pithy inside."

Rowe Weakens in Box, Browns Defeat Tigers

DETROIT, April 30 (AP).—The weakness on the mound of Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe, resulted in a 7-to-2 defeat for the Tigers in theri opener with the St. Louis Browns today. Rowe lasted until the third inning, but before he was supplanted by Elon Hogsett he had been touched for four runs and had walked three men. Hogsett finished the game.

The Browns sewed up the game in the first inning when they collected three runs.

Andrews, who went the route for the Browns allowed eight hits, but kept them nicely scattered.

Bush Is Hero as Cubs Beat Bucs in 2th, 8-6

Pittsburgh, April 30 (AP).—Guy Bush pitched himself out of a close jam in the ninth inning and poined in a twelfth-inning rally with a squeeze play, but that helped the Chicago Cubs defeat Pittsburgh, 8 to 6, today. Bush had relieved Southpaw Roy Jones, who had been hit freely.

Cuyler's single, a sacrifice, a fumble by Vaughan of Judges' gounder, and Harenett's single scored one run in the twelfth for Chicago. Bush sent another home with his bunt.

Hartnett made his fifth homer of the season and his third in two days to give the Cubs two runs in the sixth. Billy Herman hit another four-bagger in the seventh.

Wife of Pro Is Low in Post Golf

Mrs. Roland MacKenzie Cards 91 for Net 78 in Qualifying.

Mrs. Tucker, Mrs. Gross, Miss Houghton Trail by Five Strokes.

MRS. ROLAND MACKENZIE, former Sacramento, Calif., debutante and wife of the Congressional Country Club professional, won the low net prize in the qualifying round of The Washington Post match play with handicap golf tournament yesterday at Chevy Chase.

A 13 handicap player, the Congressional entry shot a 91 to post a winning 18-hole net total of 78. She finished five shots ahead of Miss Elizabeth Houghton, of Chevy Chase, the defending champion; Mrs. A. W. Tucker, of Beaver Dam, and Mrs. J. Franklin Gross, of Indian Spring, each of whom had nets of 83.

Leads in Medal Play.

An 8 on the fourteenth hole put a dent in Miss Houghton's score. Her gross was 94. Mrs. Gross played remarkably well coming in, shooting a 43 after taking a 52 on the outgoing side. An 18 handicap helped Mrs. Tucker to get her 83, as she scored 101.

Mrs. Mackenzie not only won low net honors, but outpaced a field of more than 100 golfers in medal play, for which no prize is being given, as the tournament is being run strictly on a handicap basis. Mrs. Mackenzie had the good fortune to start off with a par 4. She parred the tricky short fourth, the fifth and the seventh, and rounded the turn in 43. Coming home, Mrs. Mackenzie became a trifle wobbly with her irons and putter, and used 48 strokes.

Mrs. Clark Withdraws.

Mrs. David Clark, Army and Navy star, shot a 45—47—92. This, with her 3 handicap, gave her an 89, qualifying her easily, but Mrs. Clark elected to withdraw. The former District and Middle Atlantic champion, Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Indian Spring, playing in her first tournament in nearly two years, scored in the low 90s, but did not turn in her card. Mrs. Don Scott, Indian Spring, with 94—9—85, also withdrew.

A number of outstanding golfers failed to qualify for the select circle of 32 that will compete in the first round of match play with seven-eighths stroke allowance today. Among these was Mrs. Jack Scott, of Congressional, Colorado State titleholder, who took a disastrous 52 on the second

Whitney Colt Triumphant By a Nose

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, April 30.—Surveyor, whose racing career prior to today was confined to a single trip around the Ravre de Grace race track, scored a surprise victory in the twenty-sixth running of the Pimlico Nursery Stakes, the feature event on the opening program at this ancient and honorable race track. It was the combination of the C. V. Whitney's light blue and brown and the nimble hoofs of a son of J. P. Grier that proved a nose winner over Sunned, a representative of Mrs. R. E. Hitt. Third came Gold Buckle, the favorite, a length and a half off the thrilling first-place battle.

The race marked the high point of a day of sensational riding by Sonny Workman, the veteran Washington jockey. In a manner that sent memories back to the early 1920's when he was the daredevil kid at Marlboro, Workman piloted three winners, the others being Motto, the first-race favorite, and Aske, at a $35.40 mutuel in the fifth. fifth.

Is First Since 1918.

Not since 1918 have the Whitney banners flown in the Nursery, a 4½-furlong sprint which annually draws a field of juvenile stars. When we were singing "Over There," Blue Laddie was winning for "H. P.," papa of the present owner. Today is was Surveyor, whose only fault was a tendency to keep running after the race was over. However, those who collected those $35.80 mutuels on Surveyor and Mr. Whitney, who added $3,770 in purse money to his coffers, probably will overlook that fact.

Of course, Surveyor knows nothing of surveying but it is doubtful if the colt and Rider Workman could have found any closer way home without cutting across the infield. The juvenile was assigned No. 1 post position and Workman appeared to be riding with one foot over the rail, so close did he stick to the inside of the course.

Sunned in Front.

For a few fleet seconds Sunned showed in front, but from that point on it was Surveyor and Workman on the business end of the race. Gold Buckle and Sunned took turns in trying to catch the leader, and in the closing strides it looked as if the latter might succeed. However, those all-important final inches were lacking.

In the opener Sonny Workman rode Motto, the favorite, easily home ahead of Scotch Queen, a longshot, and Carmanchita. Scotch Queen enjoyed a brief interval in front at the far turn in the 4-furlong sprint for juveniles, but Workman soon dren Motto into a long lead, and he pulled up for the last sixteenth. The winner paid a $5.80 mutuel.

Owner J. P. Jones shot with Sun Spear in the second over the sun of and 70 yards course and the son of Sun Briar was never headed under a hustling ride by Bobby Merritt. Her Gold, the principal chaser, was second, two and a half lengths away, and Sun Monk was a well-beaten third. Sun Spear rewarded with a $19.60 pay-off.

COLD SHOULDER, in tight quarters early, finished with good courage when clear. PALASKA was held safe. VICARESS broke slowly and ran out rounding the turn. SILVERSKIN made a bad landing at the first jump and was unable to threaten at any time thereafter. BRANDON BRANDER ran strongly for the first mile and one-half. He tired and may have needed this conditioning. MY CAVALIER was done early. LORENZO began tiring after six furlongs and would not extend himself thereafter.

Latter, a keen factor from the beginning, came again and was wearing the winner down steadily nearing the fish. GOLD BUCKLE, strogly hndled throughout, faltered under punishment in the closing furlong. MADDENING was hard ridden the entire trip, but could not better her position. DASHER worked his way up on the inside and made up ground slowly in the final issue. CANTERBOY showed a good effort. LITTLE DINAH weakened. TEN LAW was forced wide al lthe way. WISE SISTER could not menace at any stage. The others were outrun.

ASKE, rushed into command going to the first turn, was nicely rated until reaching the front stretch and, under strong handling, outstayed DAWN CHILD. Latter, slow to get going, improved her position on the outside and came with a rush in the last half mile. SOURCE CIRCLE, holding a forward position from the start, held on well when the real test came. KILTAMOND lacked early speed and was never able to threaten the leaders. RETRIBUTION had no xcuses. CROWNING GLORY rated close to the pacemaker in the first five furlongs, gained stoutly when shaken up and, wearing BRIGHT HAVEN down inside the final furlong, was going away under pressure. BRIGHT HAVEN, a quick beginner, was steadied in front while saving ground, but could not resist the winner when put to a drive. HAPPY GO was never able to better his position. Latter, rushed vigorously after breaking in a tangle, hung after getting on almost even terms with the winner in the colsing furlong. INSTIGATOR, a nice chick of contention throughout, was steadily wearing the first two down nearing the finish. VALLATE, a factor in contention equal to set going, was held safe after entering into contention. PORTEUSE was never dangerous. WILROB stopped badly after having much speed in the early stages. AXENTEA, hurried to the front, shook off WORTHINGTON and HOBNAIL in the first seven furlongs ,then fought it out resolutely. WAHOO worked his way into contention steadily, but faltered badly during the stretch drive. KIBITZER showed a good effort. HOBNAIL faltered when put to a drive. WORTHINGTON could not stay when shaken up. MAKE BELIEVE passed tired horses. The others were outrun.

Duke Nine 16-1 Victor Over Hoyas

Three Georgetown Hurlers Pounded; Poor Fielding Costly.

LITERALLY bound and gagged by the eel-like slants of Harkrader, who gave up only seven bingles, Georgetown fell before Duke's hard-hitting team, 16 to 1, in a slow game yesterday at the Hilltop. Thompson, Bell and Weaver led the Southerners' attack that accumulated 20 safeties off the combined offerings of Neslie, Cuffe and Spiegel.

Errors with men on the pathways proved costly to the Blue and Gray, letting in several runs. Georgetown's lone counter resulted from O'Rourke's healthy swat to deep right field, good for three bases, which followed a sharp single by Hall.

The Blue Devils move over to College Park today, where they hook up with Maryland.

Cards' Four-Run Rally Wins Over Reds, 10-6

Stocks Suffer 1.9-Point Drop In Selling Rush

Two Attacks of Losses Hit Market; Trading, 1,553,990 Shares.

New York, April 30 (AP).—April passed amid showers of selling in the speculatives markets today. Stocks had to undergo two squalls, one of them at the close after they had weathered an earlier dip, and final prices for many leaders represented net losses of fractions to a couple of points. Several recently strong preferreds dropped more extensively.

The market's average decline was 1.9 points, the largest setback since March 23.

In commodities, rubber futures bounded buoyantly higher, reflecting the output agreement reached at London, and shares of some rubber companies firmed for a tone, obviously in expectation of higher prices. However, their gains failed to hold.

Active in Declines.

Metals, motor and steel equities were fairly active on the decline, though rails, mail orders, chemicals and oils took part in the retreat. Santa Fe, U. S. Steel, Du Pont, Chrysler, Case, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, New York Central (ex rights), United Carbon and Allied Chemical dropped 2 points or more. U. S. Smelting flopped 4 net and Homestead Mining, on its first appearance in more than a week, was down 23. Chrysler went to a new 1934 low. General Motors was off fractionally.

Reasons for the shakeout were not readily visible on the surface, since spontaneous news of market import was scarce. Wall street attributed its own bearishness to irregularites which have cropped out in industrial production, to rising operating costs and possibilites of smaller profits, to labor unsettlement, and to the market's own inability, in recent weeks, to make important progress with rallies.

Taking the month as a whole, the price average lost slightly more than two points during April while several commodities were breaking sharply. Stocks may have been taking belated recognition of recent weakness in staples.

Market Thinly Supported.

Aside from the selling intervals, today's volume was light. Each of the declines lasted less than half an hour, but while they were in progress the market appeared to be rather thinly supported, as though buyers were content with a comfortable sidelines position.

Transactions totaled 1,553,990 shares, there has not been a 2,000,000-share day since late February.

The American Iron and Steel Institute's estimate on current steel ingot production, 55.7 per cent of capacity, appeared at closing time. The rise, 1.7 percentage points, was about in line with expectations, for the increasing volume of specifications had been well advertised.

Some speculative quarters were no doubt looking ahead to the time when the large orders, placed in anticipation of price increases, would have been completed. It will also be interesting to see what effect higher prices will have on motor car buying.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Present Accounting Practice of the Treasury Results in Our Having a Hidden Budget; It Could Amount to Billions.

By Ralph West Robey.

Announcement over the week-end of the new terms for Federal Home Loan bonds emphasizes anew a major shortcoming — I think it might be called a misrepresentation — in the account which the Treasury currently gives of the financial position of the Government. These bonds, although obligation of the United States Government, do not appear in the daily statement of the Treasury Department. They, along with other items of a comparable nature, compose a hidden budget—something over and beyond both the ordinary and extraordinary budgets that regularly are presented to the public and that are accepted by the public as giving the true and complete picture of the finances of the Federal Government.

The method of using this hidden budget — of having it carry an outlay and thereby keeping the amount from appearing in either the ordinary or extraordinary budget and, hence, from increasing the public debt — is simple. It consists of a substitution of governmentally guaranteed bonds for private obligations. Thus, in the case of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, as explained by the National Emergency Council, "The corporation takes a first mortgage on the property and delivers the bonds . . . to the creditors of the home owner." The mortgage, of course, is the private obligation of the home owner; the bonds are guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States Government and consequently are just as good as any other Federal Government obligation. In effect they are nothing more or less than Government bonds.

Bonds May Be Sold by Mortgagee at Any Time.

Whether the bonds so exchanged for mortgages continue to be held by the former mortgagees depends upon their own wishes. In so far as the Government or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are concerned "the bonds can be sold in the open market at any time." From the point of view of the mortgagee, therefore, receiving such bonds is the equivalent for all practical purposes of being paid in cash. All he needs to do, in the event he prefers actual cash to a Government obligation, is to sell the bonds in the market. The market is not large or especially active, but one desiring to convert the bonds into cash has no difficulty.

If the bonds are sold it is apparent that the net result on the underlying financial position of the Treasury is exactly the same as it would be if the Treasury itself had sold the bonds and given the cash to the mortgagee. In both cases the Government, or its subsidiary, holds a mortgage on a home, the former mortgagee has cash, and the "market" has absorbed the Government bonds. As a matter of fact, from the point of view of the underlying financial position of the Government it makes no difference whether the mortgagee sells the bonds. If he does not he simply becomes the "market" that absorbs the issue.

Present Method Hides Public Debt Increase.

From the point of view of the picture that must be presented to the public, however, there is a vast difference between the two situations. In the one method—the one that incidentally has been followed in connection with the advances of the FRC—the Treasury itself sells bonds and turns the proceeds over to, say, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for distribution. In this case the public debt is increased by the net amount of such operations.

In the other method—the one being followed with the HOLC—the distributing organization disposes of the bonds. In this case the amount can be kept out of the public debt, since the figure for the public debt includes only the obligations put out by the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is through this latter method that we get the hidden budget. Its potentialities include $2,000,000,000 through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, another $2,000,000,000 through the Federal Land Banks, an unlimited amount for certain kinds of advances by the RFC, and, I believe, a few insignificant items.

So long as the HOLC method of financing is followed there is, of course, no compelling reason to include the advances directly in the public debt. Accurate accounting practice, nevertheless, makes it imperative that the amount for which the Government is obligated in these ways at least be shown as a contingent liability.

Prime Bonds Hold Steady; Others Decline

Secondary Issues Lead in Losses; Sales Total $11,541,000.

New York, April 30 (AP).—Prime investment issues maintained a relatively steady to firm position in today's bond market, but secondary loans of most categories apparently turned downward in sympathy with stocks.

The session was marked by more than the usual dullness, and transfers approximated only $11,541,000, par value.

The average for 60 domestic corporate bonds declined three-tenths of a point to 87.4. This was the largest day's recession since March 27, last.

Causes of Selling.

Dealers were unable to find anything especially depressing in the news. At the same time it was pointed out that sizable profits have been available in many loans and that some traders, taking their cue from the share market, decided to realize.

The rails were subjected to the most pressure. Losses of 1 to 2 or more points were suffered by liens of Alleghany Corp., Baltimore & Ohio, Chesapeake Corp., St. Paul, Chicago & North Western, Wabash, Western Pacific, Norfolk & Southern, Frisco, Southern Pacific, Denver & Rio Grande, Illinois Central, New York Central, Nickel Plate, International Great Northern and Missouri Pacific. Minor gains were recorded by some issues of Canadian Pacific, Santa Fe and Burlington.

On Gaining List.

Loans of American Telephone, California Packing, Consolidated Gas, Portland General Electric, Dodge Bros., and National Dairy were slightly higher.

Losses of 1 to around 2 were registered by bonds of Laclede Gas, International Telephone, Goodrich, Studebaker, Postal Telegraph, Paramount, Warner Bros., Utilities Power & Light, American Water Works, American Rolling Mill and American & Foreign Power.

U. S. Government securities were fairly active at gains ranging from 1-32 to 7-32 of a point. German obligations were somewhat heavy. The Young plan 5½s were off 1¼ and the Dawes plan 7s dropped 2⅝ points. Advances of 1 to 2 or more points were held by loans of Poland and North German Lloyd.

Curb's Prices Sag in Flurry Of Realizing

Metals, Other Industrials Lead Decline; Sales, 252,000 Shares.

New York, April 30 (AP).—Brief selling flurries resulted in a sag in curb prices today. Losses were most pronounced among metals and other industrials, but recessions of fractions to around 2 points embraced the entire list.

Except for the short-lived reactions, dealings were dull and the market inclined to a slightly lower drift. Transfers approximated 252,000 shares, compared with 199,000 last Friday.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Aluminum Co. of America, Natomas and Sherwin Williams were down around 3 points at the finish. Declines of around 1 to 2 were shown by American Gas & Electric, Electric Bond & Share, Flintkote A, Newmont, Lake Shore, Hiram Walker, Humble Oil, Pie Bakeries, Swift International, Gulf Oil and Schiff Co.

Glen Alden Coal was resistant, while Standard Oil of Indiana, Swift & Co. and Distilleries Corporation-Seagrams confined their losses to fractions.

Germany's Long Term Creditor Policy Stirs Conflict of Interests

By Anna P. Youngman.

The conference now being held in Berlin between representatives of Germany's long-term creditors and officials of the Reichsbank will no doubt reveal the usual lack of unity among the creditors. In fact, preliminary discussions indicate that serious disagreement exists as a result of the concessions which Germany has made to Swiss and Dutch long-term creditors.

Under existing arrangements partially suspending transfers on private debt account, these groups have received payment in full, whereas the British creditors and the Americans (the last named holding by far the largest proportion of the long-term debt) receive 70 per cent payment in scrip, which can only be converted into foreign currencies at a discount.

English Financial Men Denounce Germany's Stand.

English financial writers have been much more violent in their denunciation of this preferential treatment of creditor groups than in protesting against partial suspension of transfers. It is contended that a debtor country ought not to "play favorites" and both the British government and the United States Government have lodged protests against the practice. Holland and Switzerland are, however, in a strategically strong position to exact concessions from Germany because they are Germany's best customers on the continent with the exception of France, whose citizens hold relatively small amounts of German long-term bonds. Germany exported more goods to Holland last year than to any other country, while Holland sold much less to Germany than she imported. The result was a merchandise trade balance favorable to Germany totaling approximately 381,000,000 marks. Switzerland, with an excess of German imports over exports amounting to about 270,000,000 marks, gave Germany the second largest favorable merchandise balance.

It is evident that if any of these countries choose to use their trading position as a means of obtaining concessions on debt account, they are rather strongly entrenched. Of all the nationalities represented at the Berlin conference, the Americans although most heavily involved are probably the worst placed to engage in a contest to secure special concessions.

The German Institute for Business Research points out significantly in an analysis of trade balances (from which previously quoted figures have been taken) that the United States, the greatest creditor nation, accounts for the largest debit balance in German foreign trade. In 1933, for instance, Germany bought 237,000,000 marks more merchandise from us than she sold to us. Furthermore, she had also to pay 600,000,000 marks in interest and principal to this country. So the Institute for Business Research estimates that 48.5 per cent of the credit balance obtained from countries having an import surplus from Germany had to be drawn upon to satisfy American requirements.

German Editorials Back Nation's Preference Attitude.

The strongly implied conclusion to be drawn from these statements is that Germany feels that Swiss and Dutch creditors are entitled to better treatment than Americans. This interpretation of the German attitude is supported by an editorial comment appearing in the Frankfurter Zeitung. There it is pointed out that Germany shows a substantial export excess in trade with certain creditor countries, while in other cases, especially in dealings with the United States, the trade balance is highly unfavorable. This leads as a matter of course, it is added, to an ever-closer connection between financial questions and commercial policies.

This is dangerous and economically unsound doctrine but it has secured widespread acceptance in many of the special agreements that have been concluded by embarrassed debtor countries in recent years. Carried to its logical conclusion, a policy of playing off commercial interests against financial interests produces invidious preferences as between creditors for which there is no justification. Such discriminations undermine the foundations upon which debtor-creditor confidence rests, besides leading to a perverted application of the balance of trade method of determining ability to pay. What Germany can pay is not determined by her favorable balance with a single country but by what she obtains on balance from the rest of the world. Fair treatment for creditors demands an equitable apportionment of available resources among all claimants.

Foreign Markets.

London—Trading on the stock exchange was inactive in view of tomorrow's holiday. The tendency was generally cheerful. Rubber shares were firm on the favorable reception of the regulation plan, while gilt-edged securities also improved. German bonds and transatlantic issues weakened, and gold mining shares were easier. Industrials held mostly firm. The market closed steady.

Paris—Rentes led the improvement on the bourse which strengthened on yesterday's election that supported Premier Doumergue. Rubber shares advanced on the signing of the restriction program for that commodity, but citroen issues dropped 15 points. The closing was firm.

Berlin—Prices on the boerse opened firmer today. Mining and shipping shares, however, became unsettled and the market closed weaker.

Wheat Mounts On Spread of Drought Fear

Dust Storms Aid in Price Jump; Other Grains Join Advance.

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—Abnormally high temperatures, making widespread drought worse, combined with dust storms both Northwest and Southwest, whirled the wheat market skyward anew today.

Soaring of values carried wheat up to almost 7 cents above last week's low point.

Concentrated buying of July delivery of wheat, representing the 1934 harvest as distinguished from grain already in store, was a conspicuous feature, and appeared to come from sources Northwest.

Wheat Closes Strong.

Despite a world of selling to realize profits, wheat closed strong at nearly the day's top level, 1⅛ to 2 cents above Saturday's finish; corn, ⅞ to 1⅜ up; oats, ¾ to 1⅛ advanced; and provisions varying from 12 cents decline to a rise of 5 cents.

Exceptional buoyancy shown by wheat was in the face of stock market weakness and notwithstanding apparent likelihood of scattered showers Northwest.

On the other hand, seasoned observers of crop conditions wired that taken all in all the domestic spring wheat crop outlook for this time of year was the most unfavorable known in nearly half a century.

One leading authority reported that although rain soon would cause considerable improvement, the benefit would by no means be as great as last season when June 1 estimates of yield were afterward reduced 100,000,000 bushels because of subsoil moisture shortage not nearly as bad as the one existing at present.

Adding to Advance.

Adding to the upward momentum of wheat was a comprehensive unofficial summary putting the probable 1934 United States winter wheat outturn at 494,000,000 bushels.

This would be 5,000,000 bushels under the total indicated a month ago. Another stimulus to higher quotations was 2,054,000 bushels decrease of the United States wheat visible supply today, making the present stock in sight about 38,500,000 bushels less than the total a year ago.

Corn and oats prices took their cue from wheat, and much more than overcame effects of heavy liquidating sales of May corn.

Americans Stirred By Rubber Parley

Proposed London Pact to Curb Yield Feared in United States.

London, April 30 (AP).—American observers today expressed apprehension over a proposed agreement of producing nations to limit the production of rubber. A draft of the agreement, the foreign office announced, is under discussion by representatives of the governments of Great Britain, India, France, Holland and Siam.

It was learned from a reliable source that the American Government, which has been kept advised of the negotiations, fears that the agreement will affect manufacturers adversely. The United States now consumes about 50 per cent of the rubber produced.

Those interested in the present scheme recalled the regulations imposed in 1925 which sent the price of rubber to $1.25 a pound.

Steel Operation Increased to 57 Per Cent

Emphasis in Industry Shift From Bookings to Production.

Cleveland, April 30.—Emphasis in the steel industry last week shifted from bookings to production, with the steel rate up 2 more points to 57 per cent—equal to the highest reached last year in the third week of July—and indications pointing to a continuation of a strong operating situation, states the magazine Steel.

The rate now has risen three consecutive weeks, gaining 9 points in that time, and producers do not expect the top of the present movement will be attained much before June.

Underlying strength is imparted by the fact that in addition to the leading consumers' requirements for two to three months ahead, now on mill books, all steel users evidently have taken the opportunity to replenish or increase their stocks. Even though tonnages are small in many instances, this has built up a formidable backlog which already is causing producers to fix deadlines for specifications.

Nearing Auto Peak.

Automobile output is close to the spring peak, with approximately 390,000 cars made in April, and this number scheduled for the coming month. Though steel shipments to some plants were suspended last week due to strikes, barring a spread of labor difficulties these are not expected to interfere seriously, with production for this quarter. Railroads have about completed their purchasing programs, and building construction is making slow progress.

It now remains to be seen how much of the steel negotiated prior to recent price advances can be absorbed before July 1. There has been no improvement under the steel code so far as concerns the giving of options to buy—that form of contract universally chosen by consumers extending them the right to cancel any tonnage not wanted, while it binds producers to deliver at specific time and price.

Consumers generally are not making further commitments for the reason the time now is past when they can benefit from lower prices on most products. The advance, however, is not yet 100 per cent effective, as for example in some branches of the industry not yet under codes. New price advances, in addition to those already announced in steel, include $3 a ton on rail steel reinforcing bars, and 15 to 25 cents per 100 pounds on steel from warehouses.

Structural Shape Awards.

Structural shape awards for the week dropped to 10,880 tons from 14,600 tons in the week preceding. Inquiries are out for 50,000 tons for PWA bridges in the Middle West. Seven fabricators shared in an award of 7,000 tons of plates, shapes and sheets for seven Coast Guard cutters. For the Government dam at For Peck, Mont., 3,327 tons of concrete bars have been placed. Miami, Fla., has awarded 8,000 tons of cast pipe.

Railroad purchases include 6,000 tons of plates and shapes by the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western for freight car repairs; 4,000 tons of rails by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis, and reported 500 steel box cars for Chicago Great Western.

Nut and bolt output for the first three months this year was double that of the comparable period last year. A leading Eastern automobile body builder reports fabricating 18,500 tons of steel in the first quarter, up from 6,000 tons from last year. Armco International Corp. has booked 1,000 tons of sheets for Russia.

A few sales of pig iron have been made at the recent price advance of $1 a ton. Jackson County furnaces have raised silveries and bessemer ferrosilicon iron 50 cents a ton. Scrap is easier, Steel's scrap composite being off 21 cents to $12.

It was due largely to the export of 97,281 tons of scrap in March that the total of iron and steel exports increased 110,085 tons to 261,269 tons, highest of any month since July, 1929. March imports, 38,396 tons, were 12,991 tons over February.

Pittsburgh steelworks operations last week rose 3 points to 46 per cent; Chicago 5 to 59; Cleveland 6 to 80; Wheeling 6 to 79; Buffalo 11 to 68; eastern Pennsylvania 1½ to 41½. The Youngstown rate was shown down 2 to 58. Detroit remained 94; New England 89; Birmingham 52.

Steel's iron and steel price composite holds at $34.77 and the finished steel index $54.80.

Chicago Business Steady.

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—The Association of Commerce reported that Chicago business held at a steady pace last week.

There was seasonal improvement in a few lines, notably summer clothing and furniture, garden wares. Mail order and wholesale houses reported increased demand and the industrial field showed better activity in electrical and equipment lines. Employment has improved, especially by reason of activity at the Century of Progress.

Winchester, Va., April 30 (AP).—The first feature of the apple blossom festival, to be held here Thursday and Friday, will be an old-fashioned torchlight parade in which firemen of Winchester and surrounding communities will participate.

Bands from the Staunton Military Academy, Mount Union (Pa.) High School, Handley High School of Winchester and the Winchester City Concert Band will be in line.

Each of the four Winchester fire companies will be represented, the fire-fighters clad in full dress uniform. They will show their equipment.

Decorations of the town will remain up until the end of the celebration week, the committee has decided.

Shafer Will Run Again in Norfolk

Anti-Byrd Democrat Plans Council Slate.

Norfolk, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—C. Bruce Shafer, anti-Byrd Democrat, today said a full councilmanic ticket would be named Friday to oppose four councilmen whose terms expire in September. The election is in June. Shafer says his platform will be "prosperity and less taxation."

He will be a candidate himself and his three running mates, he said, will be professional and business men, "not tied to any politician."

Shafer was a candidate for council several years ago and was beaten by a few hundred votes.

Richmond's Reds Are Granted Park

Will Demonstrate Today After Location Row.

Richmond, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Richmond Communists and members of the Workers Protective League will stage a May Day celebration here tomorrow in a city park, use of which has been granted by the mayor.

The use of a downtown park was originally denied, and the suburban area suggested, but the Communists said they would defy the mayor and put on their show in a more accessible location.

In changing their minds and accepting the mayor's proffered park, the Communists emphasized that they do not surrender their rights or withdraw their protest. Spokesmen for the Communists say they are accepting the mayor's offer to avoid an attack by city police on the demonstrating workers.

"Petting Party" Holdup Suspects Held in Norfolk

Norfolk, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Accused of a series of holdups, the victims of which were members of "petting parties" in parked automobiles, three youths were arrested here today.

They gave their names as Charles Spring, 18; Frank Spring, 17, and Carl Dudley, 19, all of Norfolk.

R. M. Parker identified Charles Spring as one of a trio that held him up in Lakewood while he was sitting in a parked car. He said the bandits took $17. On Frank Spring's person was found a bill fold bearing the name of H. C. Morgan. Morgan previously had reported to police that he was held up and robbed on the shore drive Saturday night while he sat in a parked car with a companion.

The police believe they will be able to link the trio with a number of holdups during the past few weeks. They are suspected of having robbed J. M. Rice while he sat in a parked car on Wells Parkway, Ocean View, Sunday morning.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

John Gully, sportsman, fighter, jail inmate, member of Parliament, literally fought his way out of prison and into fame and fortune. In 1805 Gully was a butcher boy in prison for his debts. A visitor came to the prison one day—it was Henry Pearce, "The Game Chicken," heavyweight champion of England and boyhood friend of Gully.

Pearce invited Gully to spar with him. Gully accepted, and gave the champion a tough battle. An enemy of Pearce heard of Gully's ability, and paid his debts so that Gully could meet the champion in a title bout. When the bout was held Pearce won, but Gully had earned a reputation which enabled him to claim the title upon Pearce's retirement. He defended it successfully in 1806.

Gully then bought an inn, became wealthy, then interested himself in race horses. Twice his horses won the famous English Derby. Later he was elected as a member of Parliament to represent Pontefract. Gully died a millionaire in 1863.

The whistling buoy depends upon the swaying motion of the waves to give it power. So long as it rocks up and down with the waves its uncanny mechanism forces air through the warning whistle. Such buoys are usually anchored in dangerous spots along the coast. One of these buoys in 1915 broke away from its moorings off Nantucket and drifted a year and a half before it was found. It was still whistling.

Tomorrow—Billy the Kid.

Second Bausell Trial Set Today

Son's Illness May Delay Murder Case.

Wytheville, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—Exonerated of the charges that they shot to death Mrs. Virginia Cornett Bausell, Henry F. Bausell, 56, and his son, Bernace, 26, of Bristol, will go on trial tomorrow morning in Wythe County Circuit Court here on an indictment alleging they killed T. Henry Cornett, father of Mrs. Bausell. The latter was the estranged wife of Bernace Bausell.

The physical condition of Bernace Bausell may delay the second trial. Wounded in the altercation January 13 that resulted in the death of Virginia Bausell and Cornett, and the wounding of his own father, Bernace Bausell was on the verge of collapse when the first trial ended last week.

Young Bausell also suffered a wound in his side when fired on January 7 by Cornett when he attempted to leave the Cornett home with his child, whom he had taken from Bristol to Rural Retreat to visit her mother.

License for Evaporated Milk Industry Sought

Allegany Forest Camp, Based On CCC System, Is Proposed

Cumberland, Md., April 30 (Spl.).—The Allegany County Welfare Board, with the cooperation of the State Forestry Department, is considering organization of a county conservation company along CCC lines for work in the State forests.

It would comprise about 50 young men whose families are on relief rolls and who were unable to enter the CCC because of limited quota.

The plan has the approval of District Forester H. C. Buckingham, who states there is plenty of work to be done in the State forests. The pay would be $30 a month, but most of the money would be allotted to the parents.

It is thought that approval of the plan can be obtained from the State emergency relief administrator, in lieu of direct relief now being paid to such families. The Federal offices of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the Third Corps Area will be asked to approve the project and assist in the establishment of the camp. The State forestry department can furnish equipment, other than clothing and shoes. The county has facilities to supervise camp health, water and sanitation.

The Rev. Dr. Edward L. Watson, of Baltimore, vice chairman of the National Sesqui-Centennial Celebration of American Methodism, preached morning and evening. Danville Abandons Traditional Rites

Danville, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—It was announced today that the traditional Memorial Day rites would be abandoned owing to the fact that only five Confederate veterans remain Danville and most of them are too weak to attend the exercises that have been held on the lawn of the Confederate Memorial since reconstruction days.

Inquiry developed the fact that the Women's Memorial Association which arranged the affair for a generation no longer has any living member.

The Daughters of the Confederacy, unwilling to let the Memorial Day ceremonies lapse entirely, will give the veterans a dinner.

Krout, Nixon Trials Are Set

Cases Involve One Death by Shooting, Two by Boiler Blast.

Cumberland, Md., April 30 (Spl.).—Two cases will be heard next week in Allegany County Circuit Court involving the death of three persons.

Claude Krout, of Hagerstown, will be placed on trial charged with the murder of Owen D. Sherley, Hagerstown contractor and hotel proprietor, before Judge Frank G. Wagaman of Hagerstown.

A change of venue was granted at the request of the State and it is the first time that at the instance of the State a murder trial has been removed from Washington County. The shooting was the result of an argument over the rent of a restaurant which Krout operated, according to the police.

Eugene Nixon will go on trial on a manslaughter charge arising from a blast which wrecked the house he occupied in this city. Joseph Paul Lechliter and Ira Crabtree, who were in the basement, were killed and Jeanora, 9, daughter of Nixon, was injured.

The coroner's jury heard former Sheriff William R. Harvey, Department of Justice agent, testify he found in the wrecked home portions of a boiler which he charged was used in the manufacture of liquor. Nixon has elected to be tried before a full bench instead of a jury.

New Plane Carrier To Make First Trip

Whole Channel Cleared for Giant Ranger.

Norfolk, Va., April 30 (Spl.).—When the giant new airplane carrier Ranger goes out to sea tomorrow at 5 p. m., on her initial voyage, she will have the entire channel, from Newport News to Cape Henry, all to herself.

Because of the size of the craft, the Navy and Coast Guard warned shipping to keep the channel free while the big ship is going out. She will remain at sea until Wednesday forenoon and on her inward trip again will have the channel for her exclusive use.

The Ranger is the newest and largest of airplane carriers for the Navy. She was built at the plant of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. and is to join the United States Fleet the latter part of May. She is to come to the Norfolk Naval Operating Base before proceeding to New York, where the fleet will be reviewed by the President May 31. THE BUNGLE FAMILY A Mystery By Harry J. Tuthill

A SPLENDID OPPORTUNITY TO APPLY DEDUCTIVE SKILL WAS OFFERED TO THE OFFICIALS OF THE VENDETTA DETECTIVE AGENCY, AS SIBYL DARDANELLA'S FIANCE TRIED TO REMEMBER HOW HE LOST HIS MEMORY.
McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N.Y.
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 5-1
AND WHEN, MAJOR, DID YOU FIRST NOTICE THAT YOU HAD LOST PART OF YOUR MEMORY?
LET'S SEE... SHORTLY AFTER WE DECIDED TO GET MARRIED, WASN'T IT DEAR?
OH I THOUGHT OF IT LONG BEFORE THAT, SWEET. LOTS OF TIMES.
WHEN THE FIRST 31 YEARS OF A MAN'S LIFE IS A TOTAL BLANK TO HIM HE'S BOUND TO BROOD ABOUT THINGS.
31 YEARS! HOW, MAJOR, ARE YOU SO POSITIVE IT'S EXACTLY...?
YES, THAT DOES SEEM ODD DEAR.
DID I SAY 31? WELL I MEANT ABOUT 31.. SAY 29...OR 30. ANYHOW, I SEEM TO REMEMBER WEDDING BELLS RINGING. REAL LOUD.
AND YOU FEAR, MAJOR, THAT IF YOU NOW WED MRS. DARDANELLA YOU WILL BE A...AH... BIGAMIST?
IT SEEMS PERFECTLY ABSURD TO ME.
I'LL PAY ANY AMOUNT OF MONEY...HUNDREDS, THOUSANDS, TO DO AWAY WITH THIS TERRIBLE CLOUD THAT'S SO CRUELLY HOLDING UP OUR WEDDING.

DIXIE DUGAN Logic of Euphy By J. P. McEvoy and J. H. Striebel

DIXIE SEES NOW THAT FLOSSIE PROBABLY TRICKED EDGERTON INTO THAT ROMANTIC SCENE WHICH SHE ACCIDENTALLY WITNESSED — BUT HAS EDGIE REALLY FALLEN FOR FLOSSIE'S GAME? AND IF HE HASN'T, WHY ISN'T HE MAKING ANY EFFORT TO SEE DIXIE AGAIN? IT TAKES EUPHY TO CLEAR THINGS UP A LITTLE AHEM! — AS ME OLE DUTCH GRAN'MA USED T'SAY — "DON'T STICK YOUR NOSE INTO OTHER FOLKS BUSINESS, BUT WHEN SOME FOLKS IS COOKIN' UP A MESS YA CAN'T BE BLAMED FOR SNIFFIN IT."
EUPHY! — WHAT ARE YOU TALKIN' ABOUT?
WA-AL — A BRASS DONKEY WITH NO EYES COULD SEE WHAT'S WORRYIN' YA — AN' I THOUGHT T'WAS ME DUTY T'TELL YA SUMPIN'
McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N.Y.
I WAS LOOKIN' OUT TH' WINDOW T'OTHER DAY JEST WHEN THAT FUZZY HAIRED BLONDE FEMALE WAS LEAVIN' AN' I SEEN MISTER JEPPWORTH COMIN' T'CALL ON YOU — BUT JEST THEN SHE STEPPED OUT AN' TALKED T'HIM SECRET-LIKE AS IF ABOUT YOU, AN' HE TURNED SORT O' SCARY AN' WALKED OFF WITH HER.
UH — THANKS, EUPHY
SO EDGIE DID COME BACK TO EXPLAIN! AND SHE SAID SOMETHING TO HIM THAT MADE HIM GO AWAY AND NOT COME AGAIN! — I KNOW SHE TOLD HIM SOME TERRIBLE LIE — AND —— I CAN'T LET HER GET AWAY WITH IT!

THE GUMPS Please

MAMA — THE GROCER'S ON THE PHONE AGAIN — HE SAYS WE OWE HIM $4.82 —
GOOD HEAVENS — TELL HIM I'M NOT HERE — YOU TALK TO HIM —
EXPLAIN TO HIM THAT HIS BILL WILL BE PAID WITHIN A WEEK ABSOLUTELY — TELL HIM WE'RE GETTING $10,000,000 - CASH —
YES — THAT BILL WILL BE PAID NEXT WEEK — WE'RE GETTING $10,000,000
Reg U.S. Pat. Off.; Copyright, 1934, by The Chicago Tribune.
HE SAYS HE DOESN'T WANT $10,000,000 NEXT WEEK — HE WANTS $4.82 TODAY OR HE SAID HE'S COMING OVER —

SHIELD YOURSELF BEHIND THE BOY, MIKE — AND FEED THE DICK HOT LEAD WHILE I, MAC, MILREY AND I GO ON UPSTAIRS AND GET THINGS ALL SET FOR 'IM UP THERE!

Walt Mason, Himself

Neurotic.

James Jinx is 6 feet high, and has a pirate's eye; of Viking build, he's always filled with fear that he will die. His symptoms dire he paints, until he jars the saints; he fills the air with his despair, with murmurs and complaints. The weather is too warm to suit his tortured form; or it's too cold and he makes bold to cuss around and storm. He looks too big and strong to murmur all day long, and people hear his wailings drear, and say there's something wrong. Say Harry, Tom and Dick, "Perhaps he's somewhat sick, but he'd get well, sound as a bell, if given one swift kick. Folks hear his doleful cries, and come and sympathize, and they confess their deep distress, which treatment isn't wise. If he were left alone to sweat around and groan, he'd gain a wealth of better health than he has ever known." His wife and sisters five most diligently strive to feed him pills to check his ills, and keep the man alive. His aunts stand by his bed, through hours of pain and dread, and fan his face and kindly place a poultice on his head. And hard-boiled neighbors say, "They shouldn't act that way; they should invite that wailing wight to jump into the bay."
